Mt. Airy, Md., Feb. 26, 1912.
Dear Sir:—We have been cutting very fine peas this season from your stock. Stems 18 and 20 inches, with 3, 4 and 5 flowers, and in several instances with 6 flowers to a stem. You deserve and receive great honor from the trade for bringing Winter flowering Sweet Peas to their present high position in the market. You have already done more for the florist than the great Burbank will ever do.

Of these one has been published five different years, four have been published four years, twenty-three three years, and eighty-four two years. It should be said, however, that the sellers of adulterated seeds as shown in the department's bulletins are not the

CALIFORNIA CONDITIONS.

The rain which began falling in the California seed growing sections the night of April 8 continued without intermission until noon of April 10, steadily increasing in volume. Though so late in the spring, it was more like a January storm than a spring rain. It was much the heaviest downpour of the season and the ground is thoroughly soaked. Heavy and frequent showers followed the rain in the afternoon of April 10 and through the night. This storm seems to have been general all over the state, and should insure splendid agricultural crops. These crops require more rain than those of the seed growers or the orchardists, for the latter get more benefit from a limited rainfall through their system of thorough and timely cultivation. It is by conserving every bit of moisture in the ground through constant cultivation and following closely after every rain, that the seed growers are enabled to produce crops without irrigation on a season's rainfall of as low as ten inches.

It has been an unusual winter. The rains started rather late and soon petered out. At long intervals the process was repeated. By March 1 the season was pronounced a dry one and gloom was general. March 5 came the first soaking rain. It lasted several days and finished up with springlike showers. Then the wind whipped into the north and several days of dry north wind took a good deal of moisture out of the ground again, except where the cultivator had closely followed the rain. Apparently the rains were over for the season. No one looked for anything further than light spring showers. Hence the soaking rain of April 8 to 10 was a great surprise, though a most welcome one.

The Santa Clara valley could have pulled through in good shape without this last rain, though it insures a better summer growth. But the Hollister and San Juan districts, where the average rainfall is several inches less, had serious need of it. Waldo Rohnert says that on his place several miles north of Hollister the ground was moist down to a depth of only one foot before the last rain. Below that the soil was perfectly dry. But the last rain went in deep. At San Juan the rainfall had been an inch or two more than at Mr. Rohnert's, only fifteen miles away, and in consequence conditions were better there. Certainly there is plenty of moisture in the ground now all through the seed growing sections, and this soaking so late in the spring may insure a better average growth than usual through the summer. Still, as the seed growers say, you are never sure of a seed crop until it is in the bags.

SALES "TO ARRIVE."

About a year ago we placed an order with a wholesale seed house in Europe for a certain quantity of stock from the 1911 crop. There are many more liars than there are thieves, and it's a question which is society's worst enemy. Insurance against dishonesty is as common as against burglary, and insurance companies stake their business on the high estimate that their risks are 98 per cent honest. Did you know that? And the profits of their business prove it correct. Now, there is no insurance against lying that we know of, and we presume if there were the rate would be very high. There are three kinds of lies—the petit lie or deceit, practiced largely upon children; the lie to promote a good cause, such as a doctor sometimes tells his patients, and the deliberate lie, told largely for mercenary or selfish reasons. The deliberate lie embodies all that is dishonorable and cowardly. The deliberate liar is far worse than a thief, because there is honor even among thieves. You can trust a thief, but you can never trust a liar; besides, most liars will steal, and do steal by their lies—that is, they lie for their personal gain or to promote a loss to some other person or persons. We have record of some liars in the florist business, too—have known more than one to cancel their order, backing up the cancellation with a deliberate lie. They are the most miserable, dishonorable, disgusting morsels of humanity that we have to deal with. Some day we shall probably publish a little booklet, entitled, "What Other People Say to Us and About Us." This will include a few choice messages which some competitors have indulged in—the knocking class. A knocker is as bad as a liar, only he generally gets most of the dirt himself. Of course, usually he is a business degenerate, sore and distressed, pus-bellied and rotten to the core. The knock he sends forth is caused by an overload of pus in the brain, for any sensible man would be more careful. All those who belong to the liar class (which includes the knocker) we want nothing to do with, because nothing good will ever come from them. We want to do business with good people, upright, fair-minded and gentlemen. We don't mind it if a man gets huffy occasionally, for that is good for one—in fact, a little sauce is good for the gravy, but we like men who are honest in their intentions. If you belong to the good class, and want some good bulbs, especially lily bulbs and French bulbs, write us. Send for the Book of Bulbology, which contains prices.

shipped, because of the dry season, it did not occur to us that we had a claim for damages. After having placed our order for the stock, we, on our part, sold the greater part of it before it became apparent that only a small delivery would be made. All sales were by mail. No written contracts were executed; the contracts all consisted of our tender, the customer's acceptance and our acknowledgment. In the latter we stipulated in every case that the order was entered "subject to the usual disclaimer, shipment on arrival." When only partial delivery was made to us we applied the stock pro rata on our orders; since we had not booked up all our purchases, the deliveries we made to our customers were slightly better than the delivery we received. But one of our customers went into the market and bought at considerably higher prices to make up the shortage on our delivery. He asks us to pay the bill. We believe that we are strictly within our legal rights in refusing. Can you give us any information? H. & O.

The correspondents can not be compelled to deliver goods upon the sales here described, nor to pay damages for their failure to deliver them. They are released from their obligation by reason of the fact that the goods have not been delivered to them, and that they themselves sold the goods, not absolutely but conditionally. The condition was that delivery was to be made "on arrival." If the sale by the correspondents had been absolute and not merely conditional they would have been bound, whether the person of whom they bought made his deliveries or not. But such phrases as "delivery on arrival" or "sold to arrive" or the like, have often been before the courts for interpretation, and it has always been held that they import a conditional sale. The sellers stipulate that they have made arrangements to have certain goods delivered to them, that they expect delivery to be made accordingly, and that when these goods arrive, or if they arrive, delivery shall be made under the conditional contract. The sellers are bound, in such a case, if it is not true that they have made arrangements to have the goods delivered to them. They are bound also if they do anything to prevent delivery of the goods to themselves, or if they neglect any reasonable means of having them duly delivered. But if they are not responsible for the non-arrival of the goods, by an act either of commission or omission, then they are bound simply to deliver the goods if they arrive as expected. If arrival is prevented by any cause for which the sellers are not responsible the contract is at an end. The sellers are not bound to deliver any other goods than those they had in mind and expected to arrive when the sale was made, and if they should attempt to deliver any others the buyers could not be compelled to accept them. The sale is made from a specific lot of goods which the sellers have in mind at the time of the sale; the buyer is informed of this fact by the words "on arrival," "from lot to arrive," etc., and a good delivery can not be made from any other lot.

CUTWORMS.

Tomatoes, cabbage, sweet potatoes and other vegetables and garden plants, and especially those which are started under glass and transplanted, are subject to serious injury by cutworms. They appear sometimes in great numbers in spring and early summer and frequently do severe injury. The method of attack is to cut off the young plants at about the surface of the ground, and as these insects are of large size and voracious feeders they are capable of destroying many plants in a single night, frequently more than they can devour. During the last two years these insects, working generally throughout the United States, destroyed hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of crops. By the timely application of remedies, however, it was demonstrated by the Department of Agriculture through field agents and others of the Bureau of Entomology engaged in the investigation of insects injurious to truck crops and sugar beets in some of the principal trucking regions, notably in Tidewater Virginia, in southern Texas, in the vicinity of Rocky Ford, Colo., in southern California, in the vicinity of Sacramento, Cal., in Stark county, Indiana, and in some other regions, that these insects can be readily controlled, large areas being successfully treated. The usual method of control is by the use of poisoned baits.

Take a bushel of dry bran, add one pound of arsenic or Paris green, and mix it thoroughly into a mash with eight gallons of water, in which has been stirred half a gallon of sorghum, or other cheap molasses. After the mash has stood several hours, scatter it in lumps of about the size of a marble over the fields where injury is beginning to appear and about the bases of the plants set out. Apply late in the day, so as to place the poison about the plants over night, which is the time when the cutworms are active. Apply a second time if necessary.

When cutworms occur in unusual abundance, which happens locally, and sometimes generally, in some seasons, they exhaust their food supply and are driven to migrate to other fields. This they do, literally in armies, assuming what is called the army-worm habit. At such times it is necessary to treat them as we do army worms. While the methods which have been advised are valuable in such cases, these remedies may be too slow to destroy all the cutworms, and we therefore have to employ other methods. These include trenching, ditching, the plowing of deep furrows in advance of the traveling cutworms to trap them, and the dragging of logs or brush through the furrows. If the trenches can be filled with water, the addition of a small quantity of kerosene so as to form a thin scum on the surface will prove fatal. In extreme cases barriers of fence boards are erected and the tops smeared with tar or other sticky substances to stop the cutworms as they attempt to crawl over.

Clean cultural methods and rotation of crops are advisable, as also fall plowing and disking. Many cutworms can be destroyed where it is possible to overflow the fields. This is particularly applicable where irrigation is practiced.

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

Subscribers on the Pacific coast should not fail to note that their special department of The Review has grown until it now occupies five pages. Give us a boost and the Pacific Coast Department will keep right on growing.

Montebello, Cal.—H. R. Richards, well known to the trade in Los Angeles and vicinity as the representative of The Review, has bought a home and acreage near the Whittier turnpike.

Spokane, Wash.—Jesse Buchholz and C. W. Le Riche have leased the Baughman greenhouses and three acres of land at Thirty-fourth avenue, east of Perry street. The lessees will build more greenhouses and will grow stock for the market.

SPOKANE, WASH.

An order issued by Federal Judge Rudkin April 5 directed that the stock of the Inland Nursery & Floral Co., Washington street and Nora avenue, be sold at auction. The company was declared bankrupt, with liabilities estimated at $25,000, of which $18,000 is secured by its real estate, principal creditors being the Spokane Merchants' Association and E. J. Rice. It is expected that between $4,000 and $5,000 can be realized from the stock, which includes trees, shrubs, plants and flowers. Mrs. Dora M. Lundy is president and principal stockholder in the company and bitterly contested the proceedings.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Various Notes.

The Butler Florists had two extra stores in which to handle their Easter trade, one on First avenue and one on Third avenue. They report fairly good trade at all branches.

Rosaia Bros. had a large force of additional help for Easter at their store on Third avenue. They did a big business and had not much stock left over.

The Hollywood Gardens took an overflow store in the downtown district on Second avenue, to help move their stock.

M. A. Davis had the store adjoining his own in the Burke building, and handled a large quantity of lilies and potted stock there.

M. A. Crouch has opened a flower store in the new market, at First avenue and Pike street. This is a first-class location for business and the good wishes of the trade are with him.

Risdon & Son were hampered by the delay in the construction of their place in the Arcade building. Miss Risdon, however, was doing fair business under the circumstances.

Mrs. L. W. McCoy had a large stock of lilies and made a pretty good clean-up.

The Harrington Co. was doing big business at both stores.

The Burdett Co. occupied most of the sidewalk on First avenue with its extra stock.

The Paris Florists, on Pike street, had their hands full in disposing of the big lot of lilies and other stock they had for sale. T. W.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Market.

The usual slump after a good holiday did not occur here. On the contrary, some fine wedding decorations and a large amount of funeral work have kept stock well cleaned up and the retailers all busy. While the decorations at the charity ball were largely carried out by ladies connected with the management, yet there was a big call for flowers and corsages. The heavy rains have damaged the outdoor flowers somewhat, which helps to clean up indoor stock. This is plentiful in nearly all lines, and of good quality. The only decided shortage is in orchids, and other flowers have in some cases to be substituted for these. Early Cattleya Mossiae and C. Schroederae are the best offerings, but several of the evergreen dendrobiums, white phalaenopsis and a few vandas are also seen. Valley is quite plentiful and of good quality; the prices are shaded a little by some wholesalers.

Jonquils are the latest addition to the bulbous stock, and, as usual, they are showy and serviceable. Tulips are magnificent now and the shortage in yellows no longer exists. Fine flowers of Coreopsis grandiflora and some excellent gladioli are among the later offerings, as well as huge bunches of ornithogalum, which are fine for large decorations and window displays.

ANYTHING YOU NEED IN CUT FLOWERS

We are handling the finest grades of these and can supply all demands. We make daily shipments to all points. Roses, Carnations, Gladioli, Valley and all other stock in season. We make a specialty of greens of all kinds—Huckleberry, Brake, Mexican Ivy, Maidenhair, Asparagus Plumosus and Sprengerii, Smilax, etc. A trial order will convince you of the merits of our stock. Branches of Pittosporum Tobira, covered with the sweetly scented flowers, and several yellow acacias, are good. In greens the only shortage is in smilax, but seed gathering operations are responsible for light shipments of this and Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri.

Various Notes.

Creutz & Co. are handling some exceptionally fine Ulrich Brunner roses and the gladioli are also fine, with long spikes and beautifully colored flowers.

Frank Lichtenberg has decided to drop the title "Thee Florists," by which the store has been known, and will run it under his own name. The new office is complete and an excellent addition, as is the new show room for baskets, at the rear of the store.

Tassano Bros. report a good clean-up on Easter lilies and other stock and say that business has been fine.

S. Murata is handling a high grade of yellow tulips and other seasonable stock.

At the Lindley wedding, April 9, Wright's Flower Shop had the decorations, using a large quantity of daffodils, yellow tulips, lilies, valley and roses. The bride's bouquet was of white orchids; the maid of honor carried a shower of Mrs. Aaron Ward roses, while the bridesmaids had Easter lilies.

The H. N. Gage Co. is receiving extra good Spanish irises from its grounds at Hollywood and Signal Hill, all the best colors being included. Large bunches of the white ornithogalum are also seen here.

J. W. Wolters is now well settled in his fine new store on Hill street and expresses himself as well pleased with business so far.

Business at the Los Angeles Flower Market was almost exactly treble that of last year for Easter, showing plainly enough that the demand in this section is always growing. Incidentally, this is a fine tribute to the salesmanship and good business acumen of Manager Charles Morton.

O. C. Saakes had orders for a large number of corsage bouquets for the charity ball at the Shrine auditorium. Most of them were of orchids, from three to six fine cattleyas being used in each.

the smile on the features of Albert Knopf, of the Redondo Floral Co.

A. F. Borden had the decorations at the opening of I. Brink's new cafe, where 500 guests sat down. The room was finely decorated with palms and other plant stock. Another order, which comes his way annually, was for the memorial services of the Loyal Order of Moose and here about 3,000 attended; the decorations were in white roses, Easter lilies and palms.

The Market.

With the Easter rush over, everything is back to normal again and there is a smile of satisfaction on every side. Business was slow in getting started and it was really Saturday before orders commenced to loom up; then it taxed the clerks to the utmost to handle the crowds, as competent extra salesmen are usually hard to get.

There was plenty of stock of all kinds and popular prices prevailed, so little was left over. Lilies were the best sellers, while hydrangeas, rhododendrons, ramblers and basket effects moved well.

Automobile delivery proved its efficiency over the old system and we often wonder how we stayed in the old rut so long.

Various Notes.

Martin & Forbes had a big decoration at the Multnomah hotel recently, the largest social event of the season. Blooming plants and flowers were used extensively in the ball room.

John Kleger is confined to his home with a severe attack of rheumatism.

S. Goodfriend, representing Wertheimer Bros., was in town recently.

The Market.

Now that Easter is past and the hurry is over, we can calmly survey the field and count the spoils. The weather was perfect, with plenty of warm sunshine and every inducement to the flower loving public to see the splendid window decorations and purchase their favorite blossoms. The amount of stock carried has never been exceeded either in quantity or quality. Lilies were everywhere and there was a first-class stock of azaleas, rhododendrons, spiræas, ericas, primulas and mixed baskets and pans of half a dozen sizes and shapes. The azaleas, especially the light colors, were among the most popular articles and, following these, tulips, spiræas and mixed favors were in demand. Ferns and palms did not seem to move so well, but potted roses were only in half the supply called for.

Prices were about the same as those of one year ago, with the possible exception of carnations and roses, which were a shade cheaper. Although it is yet rather early to have complete reports from all the wholesalers, the general opinion is that we sold fully as much stock this season as we did one year ago.

Various Notes.

Rollo Hough and W. G. Smith have purchased from Luther Burbank his

ST. LOUIS.The Market.

The market following Easter week was again in an overcrowded condition; so much so, in fact, that a great deal of stock was dumped or sent to the hospitals in order to make room for the fresh flowers. Prices have been greatly reduced, and the retailer with a big job on his hands can buy at almost his own price. The downtown florists were trying to undersell each other last week, with prices like these: Sweet peas, 5 cents a bunch of twenty-five; carnations, 15 cents per dozen; roses, 25 cents per dozen, and pretty good quality of stock at that.

Kirkwood growers last week loaded this market with sweet peas, carnations and violets. All four wholesale houses received their share from these growers. These large consignments had to be disposed of and prices kept going down to almost nothing.

Club Meeting.

The St. Louis Florists' Club held its regular monthly meeting on Thursday afternoon, April 11, in Odd Fellows' hall. The meeting was poorly attended, owing to the fact that many were too busy with planting. When President Windler called the meeting to order there were only fourteen present.

The trustees reported that the last exhibition of the club, held at Kuehn's wholesale house, was a big success, and they advised that the club give another exhibition in the fall and one in mid-winter. A vote of thanks was extended to C. A. Kuehn for the use of his show room for the exhibition. All other business of importance was laid over until the May meeting, when a larger attendance is expected.

Treasurer Smith reported that the club's finances were in a healthy condition.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was present and was requested to lead a discussion on "Summer Cut Flowers," which was much enjoyed. Messrs. Sander, Fillmore, Pilcher, Windler, Bergstermann and Ogle took part in the discussion and some interesting facts were brought out during the hours of talk.

The president announced that at the May meeting J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, would lead a discussion on "Relations of the Wholesaler, Retailer and Grower." In this he will be assisted by A. S. Halstead for the grower, Otto Sander for the retailer and William C. Smith for the wholesaler. This promises to be one of the most interesting discussions on the program and the men selected for the purpose know well how to talk on these points. This meeting will take place on Thursday afternoon, May 9, at 2 o'clock, and a request will be sent out to all the members to make arrangements to be present at this meeting.

Various Notes.

The Missouri Botanical Garden, better known the world over as Shaw's Garden, will open its gates to the public every Sunday from 2 p. m. to sunset. It was so decided by the directors of the garden at a meeting held early in the week. F. N. Judson, attorney for the trustees, returned an opinion that the sense of the will of the late Henry Shaw would not be violated by having the garden open on Sundays other than the two specified by Mr. Shaw, whose purpose in closing the garden on Sundays was to insure his employees one day of rest each week, and the will apparently does not forbid Sunday opening with provisions made for extra help.

Kester Halstead was elected alderman at Belleville, Ill., last week. Mr. Halstead is the son of A. S. Halstead, president of the St. Clair Floral Co. and ex-mayor of Belleville. The young man also is interested in the St. Clair Floral Co. and is well known to local members of the trade, who were all pleased at his success.

Several of the young men at the four wholesale houses will give a dance

Pierre Schneider, manager of the Oakland Floral Co., at Kirkwood, had a heavy pick of sweet peas and carnations of extra fine quality for Easter and the crop has been heavy since. C. A. Kuehn handles the output of this company.

W. J. Pilcher, of Kirkwood, has had an exceptionally big season with his Mazzura and Dorsett violets. The Mazzuras, with their long stems and fine flowers, always demanded the top price among the violets. The W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co. handled them all.

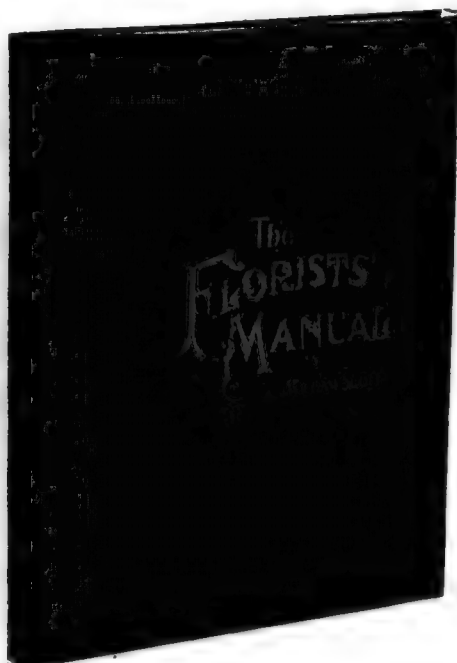

Geo. H. Angermueller says he had a big Easter trade, with large consignments of fine stock. He also had a big run on prepared cycas leaves.

Wm. C. Young, who has charge of the greenhouse plant of C. Young & Sons Co., says they have been exceptionally busy with orders of plants for shipping. A visit to the plant, April 15, found all hands busy packing. Even young Charles, from the store, had been pressed into service in the packing shed.

Considerable hail fell April 12 in St. Louis and vicinity. Henry Aue lost some glass. John Steinicke, at Old Orchard, was the heaviest sufferer. Kirkwood and Webster Groves were lucky, escaping with the loss of only a few panes.

Mrs. E. Dreiling, of Sorento, Ill., mother-in-law of Fred C. Weber, died April 8. She was also the aunt of Mrs. F. H. Weber. All of the family attended the funeral, at which there were a number of large floral designs.

The warm weather of last week caused a great rush for the seed stores, making it necessary to call in extra help. The St. Louis Seed Co. and the Business throughout this season has been fine. W. B. Paterson, of the Rosemont Gardens, has kept up the record of twenty per cent advance month after month, in all lines. Funeral work has been brisk and at times there was a shortage of stock. The bad weather, with only four bright days in March, tended to keep stock back. Mr. Paterson has reorganized his force. A. Jackman, formerly of H. L. Von Trott's, has taken the position of grower in the plant department and W. C. Cook has taken charge of the conservatory in the city and the selling department in connection with it.

Wallace Paterson, youngest son of the proprietor of the Rosemont Gardens, will be married April 25 to Miss Alice Gay. Mr. Paterson is not slow, by any means, and whether he will be "Gayer" than ever remains to be seen.

Miss Laura Norris, formerly with H. L. Von Trott, has started a stand in the Exchange hotel and reports sales good. At the Morning View Greenhouses, of which Mr. Von Trott is proprietor, an increase in business is reported.

PARIS, TEXAS.

The florists' business has been good here all winter, with an unusually large quantity of funeral work, in which all the four florists have had an equal share.

Northern jobbers should wake up to the fact that the sunny south is not the slow, easy-going proposition it used to be, as the people are refined, educated and have traveled, and are appreciative of quality and are willing to pay for quality goods, but resent sleepy or inferior stock. Too much of that class of stock has been sent here in the past and some day jobbers are going to get badly stung for trying to run it off.

Three ranges of glass in a town of 12,000 is going some, but for all that two more firms are going to erect greenhouses. Zach. Rice is going to put in a small range in West Paris, and the Paris Plant & Flower Co. is going to build a modern range near Evergreen cemetery. Mr. Goree is contemplating adding one or two more houses to his already large range. He has had as fine carnations this season as ever were shipped in from the north.

The Progressive Club has taken up civic improvement and expects to enlist the coöperation of the florists, who should by all means coöperate in the movement, as it will undoubtedly improve business conditions and create an increased demand for flowers and plants.

A TELEPHONE TALK.

to such conduct, and, after again asking the number wanted and failing to get a civil reply, she goes on about her business, answers one or two other calls and then again replies to A's frantic signal.

A finally gets his number, but is so unreasonably angry and gruff, that B, not knowing about A's difficulties, is gruff in reply, with the result that the tempers of both are ruffled and A fails to get anywhere near as close attention and good stock as he would if other methods and tactics had been used.

The Right Way.

It is a 100-to-1 chance that if A proceeded somewhat as follows, his results would be much more satisfactory:

On removing the receiver from the hook, he waits a few seconds for the operator to answer. Failing to get her reply, he realizes that she is probably busy, but to get her attention he slowly moves the hook up and down, thus giving a signal that is quickly seen without arousing any antagonism on the part of the operator, and she answers immediately. In a remarkably short time A is talking to B and, because of A's polite and courteous manner, B does his best to please and there is satisfaction all around.

The main point to be remembered is this: In telephone usage, the tone and manner of speech, and the choice of words has everything to do with the feeling created. The spoken word and its inflection conveys whatever impression each party gets of the others. Under such conditions, courtesy both on the part of the operating force and the public is like oil to machinery,—necessary to prevent friction.

A Few Suggestions.

Stop and think a minute. Would you rush into an office or up to the door of a residence and blurt out "Hello! Hello! Who am I talking to?" and then, when you received a reply, follow up your wild, discourteous salutation with "I don't want you; get out of my way. I want to talk with Mr. Jones." Would you? That is merely a sample of the impolite and impatient conversations that the telephone transmits many times a day.

There is a most agreeable mode of beginning a telephone conversation which many people are now adopting, because it saves useless words and is, at the same time, courteous and direct. It runs thus:

The telephone bell rings, and the person answering it says: "Morton & Co., Mr. Baker speaking." The person calling then says: "Mr. Wood, of Curtis & Sons, wishes to talk with Mr. White."

When Mr. White picks up the receiver, he knows Mr. Wood is on the other end of the line, and without any unnecessary and undignified "Hello's," he at once greets him with the refreshingly courteous salutation: "Good morning, Mr. Wood." That savors of the genial handshake that Mr. Wood would have received had he called in person upon Mr. White.

Undoubtedly there would be a far higher degree of telephone courtesy, particularly in the way of reasonable consideration for the operators, if the "face-to-face" idea were more generally held in mind. The fact that a line of wire and two shining instruments separate you from the person with whom you are talking, takes none of the sting out of unkind words.

A few other good things to keep in mind are these:

Be ready to talk when the party you have called answers, avoiding as far as possible having the office boy or others get parties on the telephone for you.

Do not leave any one to "hold the wire" unnecessarily while you are attending to other work or where you could make it easier for them by calling them back after you have the desired information.

Do not leave any one in doubt as to whether you have completed your part of the conversation. If you do he will be liable to think he was cut off and will probably have to call you again in order to make sure he was not. This situation is more common than you might suppose.

These and other features smooth the way in telephone practice.

Make, of your telephone manner, an asset, not a liability!

Fond du Lac, Wis.—Miss Ella Stever has opened a flower store at 110 South Main street. She recently went to Milwaukee to select some of the stock.

Marshfield, Wis.—Theo. Hipko, of Merrill, Wis., has bought the business and greenhouses of R. I. Macklin and will take possession about June 1.

Pittston, Pa.—Ira G. Marvin, of Wilkesbarre, who has taken a lease on a Main street store for a branch, is adding an attractively designed greenhouse.

Officers for 1911-12: Pres., J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O.; Vice-pres., W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-seventh annual meeting, Boston, June 1912.

FRANK SAWYER, of the Norwalk Nurs-ery Co., at Norwalk, O., is reported to have been seriously ill.

THE capital stock of the Sunnyfield Nursery Co. has been increased from $5,000 to $10,000. The stock is issued in shares of $100 each. The stockholders are Frank B. Lown, Harry C. Barker and John B. Grubb.

MANDIGO & LEVINE, of Seattle, Wash., unloaded at Big Wells, Tex., recently a large car of grape cuttings, and are pre-paring to put in a nursery. After a thorough investigation of all the irri-gated sections of the west, these gentle-men decided upon the Big Wells district as being the best adapted to the culture of grape vines.

THE Amarillo Nursery & Seed Co., Amarillo, Tex., has been incorporated with a paid up capital of $25,000. The officers are: President and manager, D. J. Muncy; vice-president, R. E. Under-wood; secretary and treasurer, W. F. Jons. While the nursery business will be the principal line, field and garden seeds will be grown and dealt in.

In a circular just issued by John Hall, in reference to the convention to be held at Boston June 12 to 14, it is said: "When we reflect that there are more than 2,000 commercial nurseries in the United States it is surprising, in view of all they owe to the American Asso-ciation, that not over one-fifth of the owners of them are identified with the organization."

THE Breck-Robinson Nursery Co., Bos-ton, has been incorporated with $25,000 authorized capital stock, by Alfred E. Robinson, Charles H. Breck, Joseph F. Breck, Edward O. Hatch and Russell O. Gardner. The officers are: President, Joseph F. Breck; vice-president and gen-eral manager, Alfred E. Robinson; treas-urer, Charles H. Breck; secretary, Shel-don A. Robinson. Manager Robinson is well known to the trade through twenty years of connection with New England nurseries and the Brecks are the Boston seedsmen. The main office will be in LEXINGTON, MASS.

To supply an active and steadily increasing demand for first-class nursery stock and expert advice in all phases of landscape work, Joseph Breck & Sons and Mr. Alfred E. Robinson have formed a new corporation, the Breck-Robinson Nursery Co., their nursery and seed trial grounds being located in the historic town of Lexington, at Munroe Station (which is in the nursery) on the B. & M. R. R. The grounds can also be reached by electric cars, which leave Arlington Heights for Lexington every fifteen minutes.

The nursery and experimental grounds will be under the direct supervision of Mr. Alfred E. Robinson, who is favorably known to thousands of customers whom he has served during twenty years' connection with large nurseries of New York and New England. The main office will be conducted in connection with the Seed and Agricultural Implement business of Joseph Breck & Sons, 51 and 52 North Market St., Boston, Mass. A prominent feature will be the Landscape Department, under the direction of Mr. Sheldon A. Robinson, giving especial attention to the development of suburban estates and home grounds.

The service that we shall give can be no more highly recommended than to say that it will be fully in accord with the high standard of excellence and reputation for fair dealing that has distinguished the house of Joseph Breck & Sons, during an existence of nearly a hundred years. In soliciting the con-tinued patronage of friends, who have so liberally favored the Brecks and Mr. Robinson in the past, we do so with the assurance that any relations which may result will be eminently satisfactory.

A very complete and beautifully illustrated catalogue of trees, plants, etc., will be mailed on application.

WINTERSON'S "Worth-While" DAHLIA ROOTS

Florists and dealers generally will find a big sale for Dahlia roots, providing they place before the public stock that is of good appearance and such as is not divided up into small pieces. We furnish large, undivided clumps of all of the varieties listed herein; furthermore, the sorts named have been specially selected for early blooming, which is an important factor in the northern country, where early autumn frosts frequently occur. Those varieties marked with a * are particularly recommended to growers of cut flowers.

NEW YORK INSPECTION.

C. J. Hudson, commissioner of agriculture for the state of New York, has issued a bulletin in which it is said in part:

"Fifty of the transportation companies of the state have recently been directed to send notices to the commissioner of agriculture, at Albany, of all shipments of nursery stock coming into the state. Custom-house brokers importing nursery stock are also required to make similar reports, and all such shipments are inspected at point of destination by competent inspectors of the department.

"The law requires that any nursery stock brought into the state must remain packed or unopened until permission is given by the commissioner of agriculture or his duly authorized representative. Inspectors of the department are located in various parts of the state and are available to make prompt inspection. To facilitate rapid inspection, receivers of nursery stock should notify the department office at Albany or an authorized inspector of the receipt or expected receipt of such consignments, giving full information."

FLORISTS AND DECIDUOUS STOCK.

Year by year the demand increases for choice trees and shrubs, and the way the nursery business is expanding is one of the astonishing signs of the times. There are few country florists who are not called on to do more or less of this planting each season, and there is an almost unlimited field for the future. Some florists are wide-awake and preparing for the ever increasing demand, but many others should exert themselves and get ready for the business which can be theirs almost for the asking. Some there are who scoff at this so-called "landscape" end of the business, but that it is profitable all who have engaged in it, and really attended to the wants and wishes of their customers, can testify.

One florist who comes to mind, who has not been in the greenhouse business long, now employs over thirty men from spring to autumn each season, with a smaller number in winter, doing grading, planting, pruning, spraying and caring for his customers' grounds, and he finds there is fully as much money in this branch as in the cut flower business. After Memorial day and until the end of September, practically one-third of the year, cut flower and plant sales are at their lowest ebb, while at the same time the other branch is fairly brisk and, if properly nursed and looked after, will prove a splendid additional source of revenue.

Now is the time to plant deciduous stock of all kinds, and the earlier it can be finished up the better. Never let the roots become dry. If they do get into this condition be sure to moisten them well at planting time. Windy days are the worst for planting operations and roots should be covered with burlap or mats as a protection. Partially fill the holes, then soak with water and let this drain away before finally filling up the holes. Never use manure about the roots of any trees or shrubs; it is mistaken kindness. Use it on the surface, rather, as a mulch. Shrubs, especially if of a large size, should always be pruned back well at planting time. The same applies to elms, oaks, lindens and other deciduous trees.

It is strange how few florists plant even a small selection of the many desirable shrubs about their home grounds or in the field, where customers can inspect them while in flower. Take the many improved and beautiful lilacs, philadelphus of the Lemoinei type, loniceras, viburnums, malus, deutzias and spiræas, to mention only a few, and what a wealth of splendid material we have! A row, bed or border containing a selection of these, correctly labeled, would be one of the best advertisements any country florist could have. This is not to mention hardy herbaceous perennials, for which there is a greater call every year and which any florist can easily and inexpensively stock up on. A whole host can be raised from seed, others by cuttings or division. Do not restrict your trade to one in tender bedding plants. There are many who care naught for these, but to whom the hardy brigade of plants appeal strongly. Equip yourself to meet this coming trade. There will be frequent cultural notes in these columns during the year on how to do it.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

Proposed Rose Test Garden.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society and representative rose growers held a meeting in New York, specially called to confer with the representatives of the department of parks of the city of Hartford, Conn., relative to establishment of a test rose garden. The following resolution was passed: "Resolved, That the offer of the department of parks of the city of Hartford, Conn., to establish a rose garden for testing new roses as the official testing ground of the American Rose Society, be accepted."

Alexander Cumming, head gardener, stated that the park department proposes to take land and make a garden, to place roses of all varieties therein for development. Any and all roses sent to the garden will be guarded with the best of care.

The following rules were discussed and were adopted:

1. Roses sent for testing should include five plants of each variety of the bedding types; two plants each of the climbing and pillar types.

2. Plants can be shipped dormant or growing in pots.

3. Two-year-old plants are most desirable.

4. A record for filing should accompany each variety, stating name or number of variety, classification, parentage, age of plant, and whether worked on stock or on own roots.

5. Test varieties will remain in the garden for a period covering two growing seasons, when they can be judged the second season if necessary. The after disposal of the plants will be optional between the exhibitor and the authorities, the exhibits being returned or given a permanent place in the garden as far as possible.

6. Each variety will be labeled by number until judged, when a painted label stating name or number of variety, the introducer and award will be posted permanently.

7. Exhibits will be inspected by judges appointed by the American Rose Society at a designated time, and awards will be officially given according to merit. The park authorities will take due precaution to protect exhibits from vandalism and dissemination, and give the garden every cultural attention possible.

8. A new rose shall be considered one which has not been disseminated for a period longer than three years.

The official scale of points for judging outdoor roses is as follows: Floriferousness, 20; vigor, 20; color, 15; size, 15; form, 10; substance, 10; fragrance, 10.

Medals and Certificates.

Henry A. Dreer, Inc., 714 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

Trade has been rather quiet since Easter. There are a few wedding decorations in sight, but nothing of an extravagant nature. Stock of all kinds is obtainable in almost any quantity. Beauties and all varieties of roses are of good quality. Carnations have shortened up a little, while sweet peas are more than enough to go around. Some first-class snapdragon is to be seen. Orchids are plentiful, but do not find ready sale. Bulbous stock is still plentiful. Some outdoor narcissi have made their appearance. Smilax is scarce. Blooming plants are plentiful, some first-class azaleas, hydrangeas, ramblers and spiræas being obtainable.

Various Notes.

Hartje & Elder have been sending in some of the highest grade carnations seen in this market this year.

A. Wiegand & Sons have a new Marmon touring car. George Wiegand may be seen "breaking the speed law" almost any of these fine afternoons.

The Roepke-Rieman Co. is selling some fine pot ramblers in the flower market.

Carl Sonnenschmidt has the auto bee. He spends most of his time investigating the merits of the different machines.

Hans Kipke, formerly with A. Wiegand & Sons, spent a few days with friends in the city last week.

Walter Hanson, with E. A. Nelson several years ago, is back on the job again.

Bertermann Bros. Co. was busy with wedding decorations last week.

Vase of the New Rose Madison.

Madison

The Money-Making Rose

FLOWERS pure white, resembling Bride; buds fully as large. The foliage is large, does not take mildew and resembles the foliage of the Holly.

The flowers give great satisfaction twelve months in the year.

The flowers have splendid keeping qualities.

The plants cut as many flowers as the Killarney—stems averaging one grade longer.

Crops every five weeks in Mid-Winter, with an intermediate crop, making a continuous cut of flowers all Winter.

Spring, Summer and Fall the flowers keep their shape and size, and the plants flower most abundantly.

The plants can be grown satisfactorily in any Rose House, whether heated by steam or hot water.

The plants have very little Blind Wood. In Mid-Winter, instead of making Blind Wood, they throw out flowers.

The plants improve the second, third and fourth year—improving with age.

Awarded Certificate of Merit by the National Association of Gardeners at Philadelphia meeting, April 15. This is the highest award of the Association.

Plants ready for delivery NOW. From 25 to 500 plants, 25c each. 500 plants or over, 20c each. All plants in 2½-inch pots.

GREENWICH, CONN.

The monthly meeting of the Westchester and Fairfield Horticultural Society was held in this city, Friday, April 12. C. W. Wills, of Greenwich, was elected an honorary member; four active members were also elected and eight applications were received.

The following prizes were received for our fall show: Silver cup donated by Henry Siegel, Mamaroneck; silver cup donated by W. I. Herlyn, Mamaroneck; $15 from Frost & Bartlet, Stamford; $15 from Scott Bros., Elmsford; $15 from R. & J. Farquhar & Co., Boston; $10 from E. Marshall & Co., New York. Mr. Brown, of Stamford, offered a prize for best calceolaria shown at our next meeting.

The following awards were made by the judges: Certificate of merit to T. W. Popp for Chrysanthemum Seven Oaks; vote of thanks to R. Barton for stocks, to P. Fairfield for antirrhinum and to E. McKenzie for some fine schizanthus.

James Scott gave an interesting talk on the relative value of practical and scientific knowledge in horticulture, which was greatly appreciated by all.

The preliminary schedule for the summer show is out; so get busy, boys.

Oscar E. Addor, Cor. Sec'y.

AUSTIN, TEX.

The date that usually brings our last frost is past, and now it is spring in earnest. I cut the first outdoor rose, a Teplitz, on the morning of April 3. Texas has had an abundance of rain—a slow, steady soaking and extended over a long period. Our winter has been the coldest in many years, but plant life, now rested and vigorous, is bounding into leaf and bloom with unusual rapidity.

The greenhouse people have had the best winter of their lives; there was plenty of stock and a ready market.

Austin has found herself as the carnation center for the state, as our varied soil and soft, clear river water are such as to satisfy all the plants' demands.

Middletown, N. J.—It is reported that Henry Wisner, who has been connected with the First National Bank of this city for a number of years, will shortly sever his connection with that institution and embark in the florists' business. It is his intention to erect large greenhouses on his property at the corner of Wisner and Irwin avenues.

Many inquiries have been received at this office regarding space, which shows the great interest that is being taken in the Chicago convention, which undoubtedly will be a record breaker.

RHINEBECK, N. Y.

The season just ending has been a discouraging one to the violet growers of this vicinity, particularly in the months of January, February and March, when the demand for violets was slack and coal bills were extraordinarily large, so that about all the receipts went up the chimney. Quite a number of violet houses are for sale or to rent this spring at reasonable terms.

Professor Donald Reddick, of the New York State College of Agriculture, at Cornell University, has been spending a week here, investigating the cause of root-rot and other diseases to which the violet plant is subject, and suggesting remedies. Root-rot is the worst disease the violet growers have to contend with.

The Market.

After Easter, which was quite satisfactory, came springlike weather, bringing a deluge of stock, which the utmost efforts of the wholesalers failed to move. Prices took a tumble on the best of it and the poorer grades went where they belong in times of a glut.

The retailers all say trade has been good and they have used large quantities of stock, but it is only a drop in the bucket compared with the quantity coming in.

Various Notes.

The flower shows in the city parks are still commanding the attention of visitors from this city and the surrounding country.

The Florists' Club was certainly given a treat by Prof. Brashear at the last meeting. His lecture brought a large attendance and the luncheon afterward was an enjoyable feature.

A few growers were gathered in one of the wholesale houses discussing bulb growing. Evidently none of them have made any money in bulbs this season and it was their verdict that there are too many bulbs grown in this section.

Fred Burki met with a painful and somewhat serious accident just before Easter, when he injured his foot. This has kept him confined to his home, but he thinks it is showing improvement, although it will be some time before he will be able to do much walking.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bayersdorfer, Philadelphia, were visitors last week.

De Forest Ludwig, who was home for the Easter holidays, has returned to Cornell to complete his course.

California privet seems to be quite generally killed this winter, some old hedges suffering more than the newly planted ones. Hoo-Hoo.

Weymouth, N. J.—Chas. C. Brown, known as "The Gatherer of All Decorative Supplies," such as holly, pine, sphagnum, etc., has closed his establishment here, but expects to resume business soon at some other location.

A PUFF WITH AN AD.

Thomas A. Edison is a hard-headed man, and he has hard-headed men about him. They do not fall for the "salve" that is the greatest weakness of a large class of publications.

A few weeks ago the Edison Storage Battery Co. began a series of advertisements in a number of publications, exploiting a new battery. This is the way last week's advertisement begins:

"If you will procure a map, draw a lot of dotted radial lines from Orange as the center, and extending to the farthest parts of the United States, each dot will denote a representative of some advertising medium on his way to cajole our venerable gate keeper, Kennedy, into passing him up to my office. The avalanche started the day after the first announcement of this series of letters. I have been compelled to disappoint them.

"Several gentlemen were especially insistent. Offered to guarantee as much matter in the reading columns as would appear in the advertising pages!

"I remember the feeling of disgust and misplaced confidence that pervaded me when, as a boy, I read an interesting article on some subject which proved to be an advertisement, adroitly worded, in the reading columns of a paper to which my father was a subscriber. It is needless to say those 'guaranteed reading matter' men did not sell any space. I lacked confidence in their papers.

"The reading matter and advertising columns of a paper should have 'Divorce' written between them.

"I suppose you are wondering what all this has to do with a storage battery. There is no connection. I simply wish to state to some of those who may be preparing to make a journey to Orange to save us from ruin by advising us how to spend our money that we do not wish to purchase any more space at present, and when we do we will make the selection and expect to pay for what we get.

"I only wish the publicity graft evil could be eradicated from all the papers as it is from some of them. People are interested in reading of a successful man, new products, etc. The laudations should, however, emanate from an unprejudiced pen. Properly edited, the press is the nation's greatest power for good. It has the confidence of the public, and should not abuse it.

"Now let us get down to business."

Trenton, N. J.—Wm. W. Blackman is erecting two greenhouses, 28x75 and 28x110, at 842 Center street.

WATER IN THE BOILER PIT.

Will you be kind enough to help us out of our trouble, which is water in the boiler pit? The question of drainage has been considered, but there is too great a distance to go to obtain a fall, so we must raise the boiler to the greenhouse level. The side walls are three and one-half feet high, the purlin columns five feet high and the ridge nine feet high. The boiler outlet is six feet from the base; the boiler inlet is one and one-half feet from the base. We have a hot water heating system, with an enclosed tank. The pipe in use is 2-inch for the risers and 1½-inch for the returns.

G. F. B.

While it is always desirable so to locate the heater that it will be below the level of the coils, it will give a good circulation even though it stands on the same level as the greenhouse floor. Had the length and breadth of the greenhouse been given, it would not be difficult to give directions for piping the house, but as no data along this line have been furnished, it is not possible to give any really definite advice. All that can be done is to run two or three mains at as high a level as possible and connect them at the farther end of the house with the return pipes.

ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

I am sending you a sketch of my greenhouses, each 22x135 feet and twelve feet to the ridge. They will run east and west. I should like to know how many square feet of radiation will be required to maintain temperatures of 60 and 50 degrees, when the outside temperature is 12 degrees. I will use hot water and will have the piping under the benches.

H. N.

The sketch shows two houses, each 22x135 feet, with one wall in common and with the north wall of one house of solid boards, five feet high, and the south wall of the other house of the same height, but with the upper half of glass. A boiler with a rating of 2,400 square feet of radiating surface should be used. For each house use three 2½-inch flow pipes, placing one on the center posts, about two feet below the ridge, and the others on the plates. In the south house, to be heated to 60 degrees, use nine 2-inch returns. Use six 2-inch returns in the north house. Place one-third of the returns under benches and the others on the walls or under the side benches.

F. R.

PRESSURE SYSTEMS.

We are writing in regard to the open and closed systems of hot water heating. As we understand it, the open system is connected, at the highest point of the flows, with an open expansion tank. In the closed system the expansion tank must be tight, with the addition of a safety valve. There is a safety valve on our tank at present. What pressure would the tank carry?

Greenhouse Heating Systems and

"Detroit" RETURN TRAPS

work well together

It costs no more to have free and clear steam lines and an efficient heating system than to have sluggish lines and an inefficient heating system.

It's useless to expect good results when trying to put steam through coils that are half full of condensation.

"Detroit" Return Traps not only keep lines clear of water but automatically return it directly to the boiler at practically the same temperature at which it is condensed.

Once installed, "Detroit" Return Traps are always on the job.

"For Quick Results It Has Them All Beat"

So says H. ROTH, Florist at La Fayette, Ind. Here is his letter:

LA FAYETTE, IND., March 6, 1912.

SUPERIOR MACHINE & BOILER WORKS, Chicago, Ill.

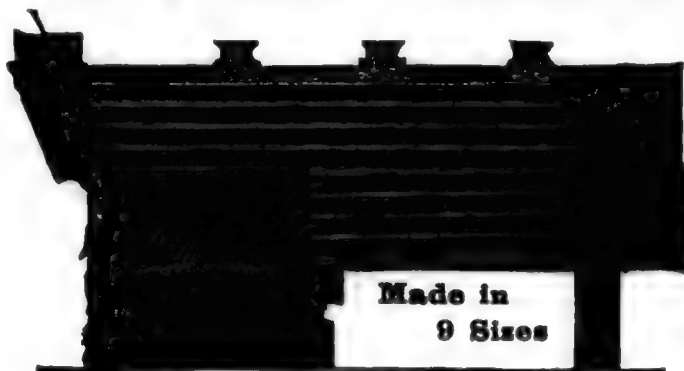

Gentlemen: In reply to yours of the 4th inst., will say that your No. 4 boiler has given entire satisfaction. I consider this boiler a great improvement over the other style boilers in my place, of which I have two. For quick results it has them all beat. I have never been so well satisfied with any change I have made as I have been with the change from the other style boiler to the Superior. Anyone wanting to see this boiler can see it working on my place, and I will only be too glad to show them.

Yours respectfully, will depend partly on the strength of the boiler and of the expansion tank, and partly on the difficulties that have to be overcome in the way of circulation and shortage of radiation. As a rule, the system should be capable of standing at least forty pounds, and often the tanks used are guaranteed for 200 pounds. The pressure should range between these two points. The lower the pressure, the greater will be the economy in heating, and at the same time the greater will be the expense of installing the system. F. R.

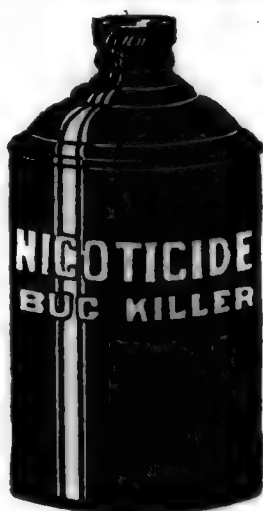

STEAM OR HOT WATER?

Will you please tell us which heating system, steam or hot water, is better adapted for the northern latitudes, where the thermometer sometimes registers about 35 to 40 degrees below zero, and the inside temperature should be 60 or 75 degrees at night? M. & L.

Whether hot water or steam should be used will depend largely upon the size of the plant, as hot water is usually considered better for small ranges and steam for large ones. Generally speaking, it is advisable to use steam only in greenhouse plants large enough to warrant the employment of a night fireman. In particularly severe climates, the difference in the cost of the piping for steam, as compared with that for hot water, might make it desirable to use steam even in comparatively small ranges. For ranges of 10,000 square feet and upwards, steam can generally be used with good success, but hot water usually is recommended where it can be used. F. R.

Bellefontaine, O.—There is a pretty story going the rounds of the local newspapers to the effect that rats were eating the stock of John Stelzig and defied all attempts at their capture until he began baiting his traps with carnations instead of cheese.

Columbia City, Ind.—Benjamin Lipman, formerly with Heller Bros., at New Castle, and who leased the North Side Greenhouses here May 1, 1911, for a term of ten years, has purchased the plant. Mr. Lipman expects to enlarge the place the coming summer.

The Market.

The 1912 Easter has passed, leaving pleasant recollections behind. The demand was better than for any previous year, with plenty of excellent stock to supply it, while prices were about as usual for this season of the year. Among the cut flowers offered were roses, carnations, violets, lily of the valley, daisies, hyacinths, daffodils, tulips and sweet peas, while blooming plants found their usual ready sale. In lilies, Formosa and giganteum were offered, both varieties cleaning up nicely. In addition to these, there were some splendid plants of spiraea, both pink and white, Baby Ramblers, daisies, hyacinths, daffodils, tulips and some unusually good geraniums in 4-inch and 5-inch pots, which seem to sell at any time.

After weeks of uncertainty and meanness, the weather behaved splendidly for the latter part of Easter week, and the balmy days were much appreciated by all connected with the florist business.

Since Easter outdoor conditions have remained pleasant, and all vegetation is starting in with a rush to make up for lost time. Much potted hardy stock could not stand for the severe winter, and the owners are busily hunting duplicates. On account of the peculiar season and the time of Easter this year, the outdoor work at the greenhouse plants has not had the attention that it usually receives by this time, but soil conditions are splendid, and everything seems to be starting with a rush for a fine spring business.

Various Notes.

Charles P. Mueller displayed some excellent Baby Ramblers and pink and white spiraea for Easter. Mr. Brackenbury put forth some special effort and arranged an attractive interior in this store for Easter week.

W. H. Culp & Co. relieved the congestion at their downtown store by renting a vacant room directly across Main street, which they used to store surplus stock until needed, and for filling and delivering orders. This firm showed a splendid lot of giganteums.

John Smith, of Lawrence, Kan., was in the city recently.

Harry Mueller surprised his parents by dropping in for a visit during Easter week.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Culp are getting settled in a cozy new bungalow in West Riverside.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey McCoy are wearing smiles over the arrival of a new daughter in their household.

Works Like Rain

And Works Almost as Automatically

The Skinner System of Irrigation is the last word in watering.

The area one man can water is limited only by the extent of the installation. All you have to do is to turn on the water and go about your other work. Every fifteen or twenty minutes come back and, by means of the Skinner Turning Device, throw the entire system over to the other side.

This permits you to water twenty minutes, leave to soak in for twenty minutes, then water again—the most successful method known to scientific gardening.

And with the Skinner System the water descends in a mist form that cannot bruise the tenderest foliage nor cake the ground.

Write today for these six books. Whether you are a florist or a gardener, these books will show you where you can have a dependable water supply at low cost—one that will eliminate all loss through drought, keep down insects and yield you double crops. Write today to

A PERFECT GREENHOUSE HOSE

NEW YORK BELTING AND PACKING CO. LTD
91-93 CHAMBERS ST. NEW YORK

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

YOUR

IF YOU HAVE A

STANDARD PUMPING ENGINE

THIS is the case whether you want the "rain" in the field or in the greenhouses. Standard Pumping Engines are always ready for instant service, because reliability is the keystone of their construction. Either gas or gasoline can be used for fuel. The supply of water may be drawn from wells or cisterns, lakes or rivers, and can be pumped direct into the pipelines for spraying, irrigating or applying liquid fertilizers, or the water can be pumped into elevated storage or air pressure tanks, if that system is preferred.

No laborious "hand power"—No waiting for favorable winds—No expense raising steam to get ready. Your expense for operation starts and stops with the engine. No extras. Every machine fully guaranteed and returnable at our expense if unsatisfactory.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Market.

Retail business is exceptionally good. Usually there is a lull after the Easter rush, yet, contrary to rules, this year parties, dances, luncheons and dinners are in full swing, having recovered from the lethargy of the lenten season, and these with numerous funerals made last week a busy one. Corsages sold best, because of the numerous dancing parties given by high school and college organizations. Therefore, there was a big demand for sweet peas, gardenias, orchids, valley, pansies, etc. Roses were not so much sought for.

Plants were pretty well cleaned out at Easter, so that now there is little variety and there are few really good flowering plants. Fancy baskets filled with cut flowers are selling well instead of plants. Boston ferns are quite scarce and it is hard to get good ones. Violets are quite poor and are falling off in demand. Valley is scarce. Roses are all in good condition. Beauties are only fair, and the price is down once more.

Club Meeting.

The Rochester Florists' Association met in the hall at 97 East Main street Monday evening, April 8. Since this was the Monday following Easter, there were but few present. The principal feature of the evening was a talk on "Fall Pruning of Trees and Shrubs," by Assistant Superintendent of Parks John Dunbar, president of the association. Former President George B. Hart presided while Mr. Dunbar addressed the association.

It was decided to invite the Syracuse Florists' and Rose Association to come to Rochester and inspect the lilacs in Highland park when they are in bloom next month.

Interest is not waning in the bowling club. It meets every two weeks, and there are plans under way for an outing next summer.

Various Notes.

The backward spring has retarded garden work of all kinds; consequently seeds are not selling well as yet.

Horace Head spent the week's end at Hilton, N. Y.

In spite of the fact that Easter was a rainy, disagreeable day, George J. Keller delivered several wagonloads of plants into Mt. Hope cemetery, to be used for the decoration of graves.

One of Harry P. Neun's large plate glass windows was cracked by the high wind last week, and it had to be propped up to hold it in place until a new glass could be set. Charles Sharpe is now working for Mr. Neun.

Miss Myrtie Bradstreet is expected home from Florida about May 1.

Charles A. Green, of the Green nurseries, has returned from the southland with glowing reports of the fine country.

MOTHERS' DAY AND THE FLORISTS

THE DATE.

Inquiries coming to the office of The Review, by mail, by telephone, and even one by wire, indicate that there is uncertainty in the trade as to the date of Mothers' day.

It is the second Sunday in May—always.

That makes the date this year May 12.

THE STORY OF MOTHERS' DAY.

It Is Four Years Old.

Mothers' day broke out sporadically all over the United States in 1908. It took florists by surprise, for none had heard of it before, and many wrote to The Review for information. But the inquiries then received have been as nothing compared to the questions and suggestions that came in following seasons, and especially this year, showing how the interest is growing.

That first year, when The Review undertook to trace the origin of Mothers' day and find what it all was about, it proved no easy task. The Federation of Women's Clubs, when appealed to at that time, disclaimed responsibility, but said, "It's a fine idea." Officials of the Congress of Mothers' replied, "We have no record of Mothers' day, but the idea is good; we shall call attention to it at our next annual meeting." Finally, the search for the founder of the day led, through the city editor of a Chicago daily, to Miss Anna Jarvis, 2031 North Twelfth street, Philadelphia, who confessed to having conceived the idea in the desire to commemorate the anniversary of her mother's death. It was not only the thought of laying some flowers on mother's grave, but it occurred to her that it would be a beautiful tribute to all mothers, the living as well as the dead, if their children, on a given day, would unite in the simple wearing of white flowers. She wrote a letter about it to a Philadelphia newspaper early in 1908, and it was this that caused Mothers' day to break out in spots all over the country.

No Special Flower Needed.

Miss Jarvis suggested the white carnation as the Mothers' day flower par excellence. "Its whiteness stands for purity; its form, beauty; its fragrance, love; its wide field of growth, charity; its lasting qualities, faithfulness—all a true mother's attributes," she wrote. But the way the sentiment appealed to the people was too strong for the supply of white carnations—there were not enough to go around—and The Review suggested that "white flowers be worn for mothers gone before, bright flowers for mothers living." This does not meet with the approval of Miss Jarvis, who does not like to have her ideas tinkered with, but it is the only way that the development of Mothers' day can be continued. To limit its observance by the supply of white carnations would be the height of folly.

Florists Should Help.

Miss Jarvis was in Chicago during the winter now ended and had a talk with The Review on the subject of assistance in pushing the day. She is a deeply disappointed lady. To her is due the credit for a bright idea—and in addition to the happy thought she has contributed largely of her time and money—but she complains that her thunder is being stolen by some while others are commercializing the day, making money from her time and expenditure, turning a deaf ear to suggestions of contributions to assist her in further exploitation. She said that if funds and assistance were not forth-

How Florists Can Help.

Every florist can, and should, help push along the Mothers' day observance. It can be done in many ways.

As a beginning, take space in your best local paper for a Mothers' day advertisement. Advertise strongly; it's planting good seed on well prepared ground.

Enlist the aid of the editors; they will help you push the work along.

Arrange a special Mothers' day window display; at least put Mothers' day cards, nicely lettered, in your window.

Talk Mothers' day to your customers.

Then, too, you can go as far as you like with the Woman's Club, the churches, the Y. M. C. A. and the fraternal societies. The idea appeals to all classes.

Perhaps you can get the mayor, or coming she would be compelled to cease her effort—but if the florists didn't stop jumping their prices for Mothers' day, she said, she would send out one more recommendation, substituting a button or a ribbon for the flower as the emblem of the day.

Clearly, the florists have little prospect of further aid in popularizing the day—they have got to do it themselves, by advertising.

even the governor, to issue a Mothers' day proclamation; others have, and the motherless daughters of some officials have written letters to the newspapers. Get busy—think up something to help the day along. Don't let the people in your locality overlook the approach of a day that has had more gratuitous advertising than any other flower day ever had; dozens of big publications have lately printed articles that we can now turn into cash.

THESE TOOK THE HINT.Working Up Mothers' Day.

It is not often fortune favors the florists the way it has with Mothers' day—the second Sunday in May.

But the trade should not depend wholly on the fact that the sentiment which inspired Mothers' day has appealed to the great American people as nothing else has done in recent years—we should grasp our opportunity and do our utmost to acquaint the public with the purpose of this annual event: "To honor the best mother who ever lived—your own." There are many ways it can be done—but none of these ways includes raising prices. Don't do that; reduce them, if anything.

Last year Mothers' day, always the second Sunday in the month, came May 14. In its issue of April 27 The Review urged its readers to work for the success of the day and suggested some of the things that could be done. The following are extracts from a few of the many letters received later in the month, telling how easily it came:

Cleveland, O.

Does advertising pay? Ask any florist in Cleveland and the answer will be in the affirmative. The plan of co-operative advertising had its first try-out in preparation for Mothers' day and it is the consensus of opinion that it was a howling success.

Practically all the florists contributed to a fund. With it a committee had banners painted and placards printed advertising Mothers' day and these were spread broadcast throughout the city. Delivery wagons of every description bore one of the cloth signs reading: "Remember Mothers' day, May 14. Wear a flower in her honor." In many of the store windows other than those of florists were cards inscribed with the words: "Mothers' day, Sunday, May 14. As a token of love for her, wear some flower on this national day." Other cards read: "Flowers for mother. Don't fail to send some floral remembrance to mother for Mothers' day, Sunday, May 14."

Needless to say, there were not half enough white carnations and other stock was also short of the demand. Every store in town was completely cleared of stock by Sunday noon and everybody was satisfied. In the third year of its existence, Mothers' day is already one of the big days of the year.

I took "The Story of Mothers' Day," as it appeared in The Review, and had it printed as a neat 4-page circular, the title, date and my name and address on the front page, the story on the center two pages, and my Mothers' day prices for flowers on the fourth page. Also I clipped from The Review the advertisement suggested for pushing Mothers' day, running it in the local paper and printing it on a card to be distributed with the folder. The one thing I neglected, however, was to secure an adequate supply of flowers—couldn't anywhere near meet the demand I worked up.

ADVERTISING MOTHERS' DAY.

The best way a florist can advertise Mothers' day will be to use the columns of the leading paper in his town. The first year that The Review urged florists to take advantage of the opportunities the day affords, an advertisement was suggested that was of a character that any florist can use, either just as it stands, merely inserting his name for "Posey & Blossom," or which he can adapt to his needs by a few minor changes. The advertisement proved a good one. It will be noted in the

THIS most beautiful idea and sentiment originated with Miss Annie Jarvis, of Philadelphia. The happy thought occurred to her that all mothers, whether living or dead, should be honored some day, and the second Sunday in May was set aside as Mother's Day.

letters printed in this issue that many speak of having used it. As a matter of fact, it has been printed for the last two years in newspapers from Maine to Washington, and from Georgia to California. The advertisement is not so good as it would be with the use of an illustration, but any newspaper can set it up on a few minutes' notice.

In its use a number of florists have greatly improved on The Review's suggestion. Most of them have followed the wording more or less closely, the principal improvement being in the display; appropriate cuts help immensely. The original and two of the variations which are decided improvements are reproduced in this issue. What The Review considers the best Mothers' day advertisement was that published last year by the Alpha Floral Co., Kansas City. It embodies The Review's suggestion with a particularly attractive illustration. The other advertisement, published last season by Penn, in Boston, is founded on the same suggestion, and is excellent, but the illustration is not nearly so good—even if this is the Mother of a famous painting there is something dispiriting in the illustration, though Penns report splendid results from the use of the advertisement.

If you haven't a good "mother" illustration, better get one, but print the advertisement anyhow, cut or no cut. Help push the day along.

MOTHERS' DAY WINDOWS.

One of the finest things the retail florist can do for a special flower day is to decorate his show window appropriately. So generally is this fact recognized that for such occasions as Thanksgiving and St. Valentine's day, something of special character usually is devised, for ideas are easy to command. But for Mothers' day the decoration conveying the proper suggestion is not so easy to devise.

rated her window, but she obtained write-ups for Mothers' day in her local papers, at the same time printing the advertisement The Review suggested, using a space of seven inches across three columns, and not forgetting the lines:

A white flower for Mother's memory.
A bright flower for Mothers living.

The photograph of the window decoration is not a good one; as with most photographs made through plate glass, it shows more in the reflection of what is across the street than it does of what is back of the glass. But the illustration will give an idea from which others can work up something suited to their needs. In the center of the window is a large framed card, with the heading "Mother" and beneath it the same famous picture of the sorrowful lady who appears in the advertisement of Penn reproduced on this page. Beneath the picture was the following:

It is a wonderful thing, a mother;
Other folks can love you
But only your mother understands.
She works for you,
Looks after you,
Loves you,
Forgives you anything you may do, Understands you, and then the Only thing bad she ever does to you
Is to die and leave you.

At the left in the window is a large card headed "Mothers' day, the second Sunday in May. Wear a flower in honor of your mother, the best mother who ever lived." This had a cut of a carnation on it.

Phoebus is in the region of cape flower designs and in the window there were two of this material, one a wreath and one a cross, each bearing the script word "Mother." With a dove on each design, a ribbon was stretched between the two birds and carrying the lettering

The first special Mothers' day window decoration to be shown by photograph reaching The Review is the one illustrated on page 9. This was from the small town of Phoebus, in Virginia, and was the work of Mrs. Carrie M. Terry. Mrs. Terry not only deco-

GERANIUMS TURNING BLACK.

Will you please let me know what is the matter with some of our geraniums? Here and there in the benches we find them turning black soon after they have been potted into 4-inch pots, while those next to them are healthy and growing. They start turning black from the bottom and keep on until they are dead. Any information would be gratefully received.

L. W.

You are either overwatering your geraniums after potting, potting them too deeply, or using too much manure in your soil. Any one of these causes would account for the plants turning black, or a combination of the three might be the reason for it. After potting, water rather sparingly until the plants are rooting freely around the sides of the pots. Your potting medium should not contain manure that is at all fresh. Well decayed cow manure can be used, or spent hotbed or mushroom manure. Fine bone should always be used when giving the final shift. It does not produce rank, soft growth, like the animal manures, but plants growing in it make firm, short-jointed wood, which flowers with great freedom, and, of course, about all customers prefer plants carrying flowers.

C. W.

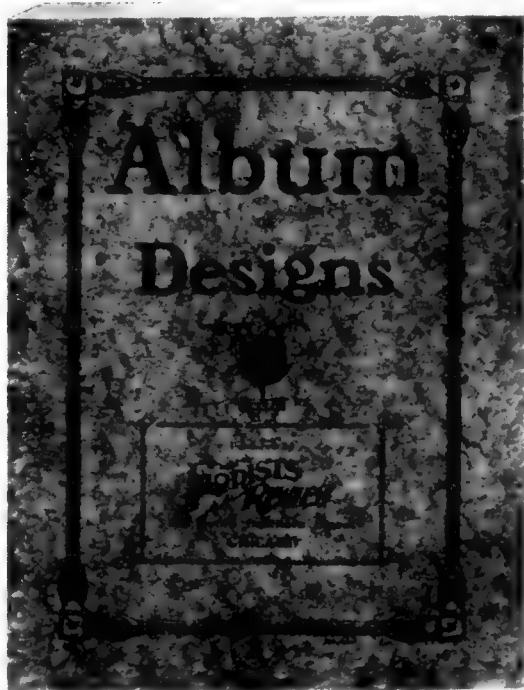

GERANIUMS DOING POORLY.

Please advise me about my geraniums. I have about 500 in 4-inch pots, which were doing nicely when they were put on a ground bed, but I was afraid that if I left them there they would send roots into the ground. Then, when I wanted to sell them, tearing the roots from the black ground underneath them would cause them to wilt and be unsalable. I also have about 2,500 in a house with benches and bottom heat, which I do not think are doing as well as they ought to. They seem to have too many yellow leaves. They were taken from 2½-inch pots about four weeks ago and put in 4-inch pots. Would you advise feeding them with liquid manure? If so, how often and how strong should I use it? Any advice will be appreciated. I forgot to tell you, in speaking of those 500 on the ground bed, that I put ½-inch lumber under them and set the pots on this, so the pots have no dish or sand under them.

A. J. F.

It would be much better for the plants if they were stood on sand or coal ashes. Never mind if they do send a few roots into the beds. You will be giving them a fresh stand every ten days at this season, or should do so at any rate, and this will prevent them from rooting in too much. Probably the plants showing the yellow foliage are being allowed to dry out too much. Geraniums, except when rooting, do not need any bottom heat, and if you have a good layer of fine coal ashes to place below them, any little bottom heat will not harm them. You should not attempt any feeding until you are sure the plants are well rooted. Then, if they are potbound and root-hungry, give weak doses of nitrate of soda water once a week. Usually two applications tone them up. Soot water is also good. Liquid manure produces a soft growth. A sprinkling of fine bone on the surface of each pot is a distinct help.

ALBUM OF DESIGNS.

It has been the practice of many florists to clip from The Review the illustrations of funeral designs, wedding decorations and other pictures which might be of assistance in showing a prospective customer just what the florist expected to do on an order. Many letters have come to The Review suggesting that an album of these illustrations be prepared, to make a better showing than the florist could do with his scrapbook. It was explained that there has been need for a means of showing the prospective customer just what the florist can do on an order for an article which it is impossible to show in its completed state at the time of taking the order. In response to these requests, The Review has published the Album of Designs. The volume now is in the bindery and books will be ready for mailing Saturday, April 27. Nearly 300 designs and decorations are included in the album. It is complete, showing all the standard designs and many new ones heretofore unpublished. The cuts are printed on heavy glazed paper and the book is bound in long-wearing covers. There is no advertising in the book—nothing but the name of the publisher on cover and title page. Since the album is published to meet the needs of the trade, no restrictions are placed on its sale, and the price is a popular one. Single copies will be sent postpaid on receipt of 75 cents, or a dozen copies will be sent by express for $6. Many florists who have agents throughout their surrounding territory will want to equip each agent with this invaluable aid in taking orders.

ASSOCIATION OF GARDENERS.

The spring meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Gardeners was held at Philadelphia April 15. Action was taken on what the association's reward should be for meritorious exhibits at its meetings, and it was decided that a certificate of merit would be the highest award within the gift of the association.

Following an invitation extended by Anton Bauer, representing the Elberon Horticultural Society of New Jersey, to participate in its summer show, to be held at Asbury Park July 3 to 6, the association tendered the P. Hamilton Goodsell cup, valued at $150, as a prize for the best collection of twenty-five foliage plants, palms and ferns included, in not over 8-inch pots. The association will offer the William Kleinheinz cup, valued at $50, for the best collection of sweet peas in not less than twelve varieties, and not less than twenty-five sprays to the vase, exhibited at the sweet pea show of the American Sweet Pea Society, at Boston in July. The contests for these cups are restricted to members of the National Association.

President Logan appointed Messrs. Kleinheinz, Ebel and Bachelor a committee to prepare a special association schedule for the National Flower Show, to be held in New York city in April, 1913. An invitation received from the Elberon Horticultural Society to hold the convention at Asbury Park in conjunction with the fall show of the Elberon Society in October will be acted on at the next meeting of the executive committee.

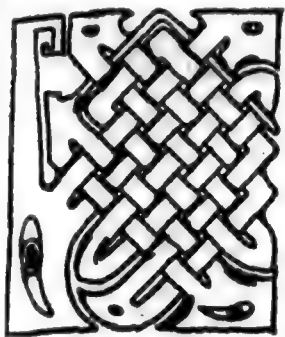

John J. Dodds, Anton Bauer and Benjamin Wyckoff, appointed an awards committee to judge the fine exhibits before the meeting, rendered their decision as follows:

Certificate of merit to Henry A. Dreer, Inc., for a group of hydrangeas, also for Hydrangea Mme. Radmone; to Charles H. Totty for Carnation Wodenethe; to William Kleinheinz for Carnation Miss Dimple Widener; to Brant-Hentz Co. for Rose Madison; to Robert Scott & Son for Rose Double Pink Killarney.

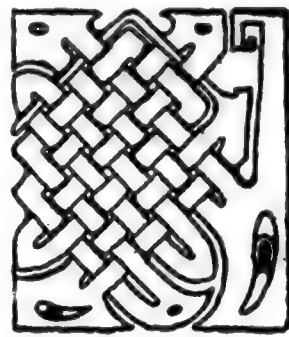

Special mention was made of the exhibits of John Lewis Childs, Calla Elliottiana; Robert Scott & Son, Rose Melody; William Kleinheinz, Calceolaria Wewartiana.

ASTERS AT IRONDEQUOIT

A QUERY AND SOME REPLIES.

Tell us more about "Asters at Irondequoit"—that is, the manner of producing high grade bloom for store trade. The illustration and item on page 45 of The Review of March 28, with reference to Mrs. J. M. Pendleton's house of aster plants, are exceedingly interesting. Are the plants transplanted to the flats or was the seed sown in flats as shown in the illustration? I note the plants are set in the field "as early as possible." Is this in order to secure early blooms, or is it essential that they go out early in order to make sure of a crop? Do any of your readers grow asters under partial shade, as in slatted frames or between rows of corn, pole beans, sunflowers, etc.? Also under mosquito netting or tobacco cloth? If this method would produce good flowers, it would be a good thing hereabouts, as the tarnish plant bug is destructive to asters and dahlias, eating the tender buds while they are opening out.

Columbus, O.

Reply From Mrs. Pendleton.

None of the growers here uses the greenhouses for asters alone. The plants are only started in the house; then, when ready to be removed to frames outdoors, under glass, they are put out, to make room for other stock. Our early asters, such as Queen of the Market and Snowdrift, are in cold-frames now (April 8), to harden and grow stocky before we plant them in the open ground, which we shall do as early in May as the weather will permit. We never endanger our asters by putting them out too early, as the high prices that we might thus be able to get for a few early ones would never compensate, in my estimation, for the many lost by frosts.

And now as to the picture of my asters which appeared in The Review. When I sent those snapshots of my house, the asters, as shown in the boxes or flats, had already been transplanted the second and last time. There were 197 flats in all, with 250 to 375 plants in each flat. This represented no small amount of labor, I assure you—six weeks of hard work, ten hours a day, with five persons transplanting. Much of the success with asters depends on the way they are handled at the beginning. At all times they require rich, well manured soil and a proper amount of water.

No, asters never do well in shaded places; they require an open space, where there is plenty of air and sunshine. It would be useless to try to grow them between trees. I can not tell anything about the use of mosquito netting or tobacco cloth in aster culture, as I have never tried that method or seen it tried.

As to the inquirer's troubles with bugs and insects on his asters, I should advise him to use the following solution for spraying: One and one-half pounds of arsenate of lead and one and one-half gallons of lime-sulphur to fifty gallons of water. Mix the arsenate of lead to a creamy consistency with water; then add the lime-sulphur, stirring till all lumps are dissolved, and afterward add the water. The lime-sulphur acts as a fungicide. I find that mixture does the work finely and does not injure the foliage in the least. Generally one spraying is sufficient, but another spraying may be given if necessary. I use the Rex brand of arsenate of lead and lime-sulphur, and consider them the best in the market. We shall plant six acres to asters this year.

From John Orgar.

In reply to the inquiry on "Asters at Irondequoit," I would say: Sow the seed in flats or on a greenhouse bench. When the tiny plants have grown to the first rough leaf, after the seed leaf, transplant into flats. The early asters are sown about March 1, for outside planting. They should be planted outside as soon as the weather will permit. A little freezing will not hurt them much if they have been hardened off before planting-out time. In order to have good flowers, it is best to get the early sorts out as soon as possible, so they can make good growth before the dry weather sets in. Transplanting makes stronger plants and more roots, so they will be better able to stand planting out in the field.

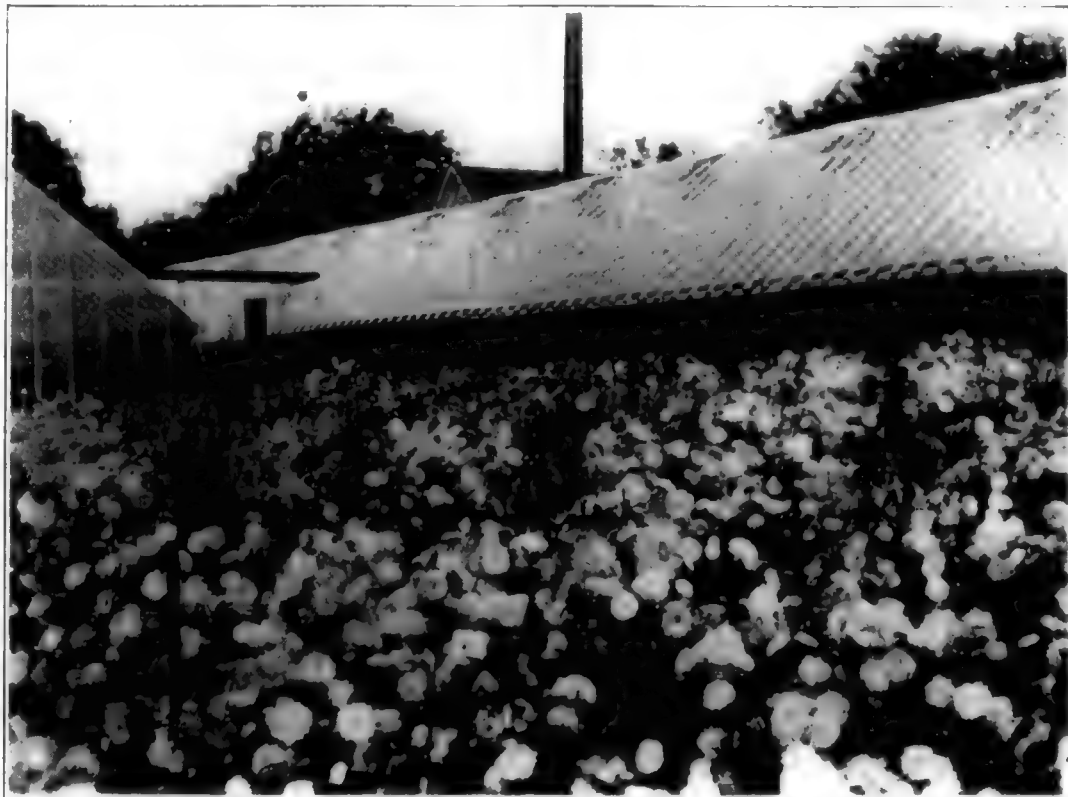

It is best to sow the late asters a month or so later than the others. They can be sown at intervals of two or three weeks, up to about June 1, for a succession of blooms. As soon as the weather will permit, late asters will do best if sown in a coldframe or out in the open, on a well prepared seed bed. If started in that way, they would also be better for transplanting. The land should be well manured and plowed the fall before, if possible. When the plants have started to grow in the field, they should be cultivated quite frequently throughout the season, to hold the moisture.

I do not know of anyone using mosquito netting or tobacco cloth. I have grown asters successfully in an apple orchard where the trees were a good distance apart. They seem to grow in almost any soil, but the soil that holds moisture well without being too wet seems to be about right for them. The finest asters I ever saw were grown on a clay soil; the earliest sorts seem to like a lighter soil.

From Purcell & Cragg Co.

In reply to your request for an answer to the question of R. L., we can only give our personal experience as gained in growing asters in a small way. Aster seedlings are usually transplanted from the seed bed or box, in order to get sturdy plants for setting out in the field. The plants are not put out early for the purpose of securing early bloom, except in the case of early varieties, but in order to take advantage of the cooler weather and get them established before it is too hot and dry. If there are facilities for irrigating, the later varieties can be put out in June or later. We have never seen any advantage in growing asters in partial shade; the stems might grow longer, but it would be at the expense of the flowers.

at any rate, and this will prevent them from rooting in too much. Probably the plants showing the yellow foliage are being allowed to dry out too much. Geraniums, except when rooting, do not need any bottom heat, and if you have a good layer of fine coal ashes to place below them, any little bottom heat will not harm them. You should not attempt any feeding until you are sure the plants are well rooted. Then, if they are potbound and root hungry, give weak doses of nitrate of soda water once a week. Usually two applications tone them up. Soot water is also good. Liquid manure produces a soft growth. A sprinkling of fine

ALBUM OF DESIGNS.

It has been the practice of many florists to clip from The Review the illustrations of funeral designs, wedding decorations and other pictures which might be of assistance in showing a prospective customer just what the florist expected to do on an order. Many letters have come to The Review suggesting that an album of these illustrations be prepared, to make a better showing than the florist could do with his scrapbook. It was explained that there has been need for a means of showing the prospective customer just what the florist can do on an order for an article which it is impossible to show in its completed state at the time of taking the order. In response to these requests, The Review has published the Album of Designs. The volume now is in the bindery and books will be ready for mailing Saturday, April 27. Nearly 300 designs and decorations are included in the album. It is complete, showing all the standard designs and many new ones heretofore unpublished. The cuts are printed on heavy glazed paper and the book is bound in long wearing covers. There is no advertising in the book, nothing but the name of the publisher on cover and title page. Since the album is published to meet the needs of the trade, no restrictions are placed on its sale, and the price is a popular one. Single copies will be sent postpaid on receipt of 75 cents, or a dozen copies will be sent by express for $6. Many florists who have agents throughout their surrounding territory will want to equip each agent with this invaluable aid in taking orders.

ASSOCIATION OF GARDENERS.

The spring meeting of the executive committee of the National Association of Gardeners was held at Philadelphia, April 15. Action was taken on what the association's reward should be for meritorious exhibits at its meetings, and it was decided that a certificate of merit would be the highest award with in the gift of the association.

Following an invitation extended by Anton Bauer, representing the Elberon Horticultural Society of New Jersey, to participate in its summer show, to be held at Asbury Park July 3 to 6, the association tendered the P. Hamilton Goodsell cup, valued at $150, as a prize for the best collection of twenty five foliage plants, palms and ferns included, in not over 8 inch pots. The association will offer the William Kleinheinz cup, valued at $50, for the best collection of sweet peas in not less than twelve varieties, and not less than twenty five sprays to the vase, exhibited at the sweet pea show of the American Sweet Pea Society, at Boston in July. The contests for these cups are restricted to members of the National Association.

President Logan appointed Messrs Kleinheinz, Ebel and Bachelor a committee to prepare a special association schedule for the National Flower Show to be held in New York city in April 1913. An invitation received from the Elberon Horticultural Society to hold the convention at Asbury Park in conjunction with the fall show of the Elberon Society in October will be acted on at the next meeting of the executive committee.

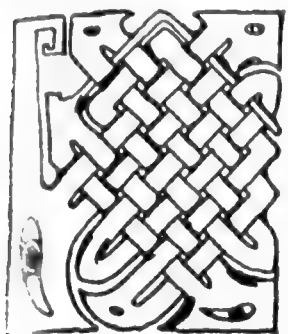

John J. Dodds, Anton Bauer and Benjamin Wyckoff, appointed an awards committee to judge the fine exhibits before the meeting, rendered their decision as follows:

Certificate of merit to Henry A. Dreer, Inc., for a group of hydrangeas also for Hydrangea Mme. Radmone; to Charles H. Totty for Carnation Wodeneth; to William Kleinheinz for Carnation Miss Dimple Widener; to Brant Hentz Co. for Rose Madison; to Robert Scott & Son for Rose Double Pink Kilbarney.

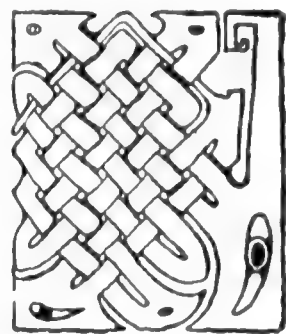

Special mention was made of the exhibits of John Lewis Childs, Calla Elliottiana; Robert Scott & Son, Rose Melody; William Kleinheinz, Calceolaria Wewartiana.

Following a suggestion that the association each year adopt a favorite

ASTERS AT IRONDEQUOIT

A QUERY AND SOME REPLIES.

Tell us more about "Asters at Irondequoit" that is, the manner of producing high grade bloom for store trade. Illustration and item on page 15 of the Review of March 28, with reference to Mrs. J. M. Pendleton's house-aster plants, are exceedingly interesting. Are the plants transplanted the flats or was the seed sown in flats as shown in the illustration? Are the plants set in the field "as early as possible." Is this in order to get early blooms, or is it essential that they go out early in order to make a crop? Do any of your readers grow asters under partial shade, in slatted frames or between rows of corn, pole beans, sunflowers, etc.? Also under mosquito netting or tobacco cloth? If this method would produce good flowers, it would be a good thing hereabouts, as the tarnish plant bug is destructive to asters and dahlias, eating the tender buds while they are opening out.

Columbus, O. R. L.

Reply From Mrs. Pendleton.

None of the growers here uses the greenhouses for asters alone. The plants are only started in the house; then, when ready to be removed to frames outdoors, under glass, they are put out, to make room for other stock. Our early asters, such as Queen of the Market and Snowdrift, are in cold frames now (April 8), to harden and grow stocky before we plant them in the open ground, which we shall do as early in May as the weather will permit. We never endanger our asters by putting them out too early, as the high prices that we might thus be able to get for a few early ones would never compensate, in my estimation, for the many lost by frosts.

And now as to the picture of my asters which appeared in The Review. When I sent those snapshots of my house, the asters, as shown in the boxes and flats, had already been transplanted the second and last time. There were 97 flats in all, with 250 to 375 plants in each flat. This represented no small amount of labor. I assure you six weeks of hard work, ten hours a day, with five persons transplanting. Much of the success with asters depends on the way they are handled at the beginning. At all times they require rich, well manured soil and a proper amount of water.

No, asters never do well in shaded places; they require an open space, where there is plenty of air and sunshine. It would be useless to try to grow them between trees. I can not tell anything about the use of mosquito netting or tobacco cloth in aster culture, as I have never tried that method or seen it tried.

As to the inquirer's troubles with bugs and insects on his asters, I should advise him to use the following solution for spraying: One and one-half pounds of arsenate of lead and one and one-half gallons of lime sulphur to fifty gallons of water. Mix the arsenate of lead to a creamy consistency with water; then add the lime sulphur, stirring till all lumps are dissolved, and afterward add the water. The lime sulphur acts as a fungicide. I find that mixture does the work finely and does not injure the foliage in the least. Generally one spraying is sufficient, but another spraying may be given if necessary. I use the Rex brand of arsenate of lead and lime sulphur, and consider them the best in the market. We shall plant six acres to asters this year.

From John Orgar.

In reply to the inquiry on "Asters at Irondequoit," I would say: Sow the seed in flats or on a greenhouse bench. When the tiny plants have grown to the first rough leaf, after the seed leaf, transplant into flats. The early asters are sown about March 1, for outside planting. They should be planted outside as soon as the weather will permit. A little freezing will not hurt them much if they have been hardened off before planting out time. In order to have good flowers, it is best to get the early sorts out as soon as possible, so they can make good growth before the dry weather sets in. Transplanting makes stronger plants and more roots, so they will be better able to stand planting out in the field.

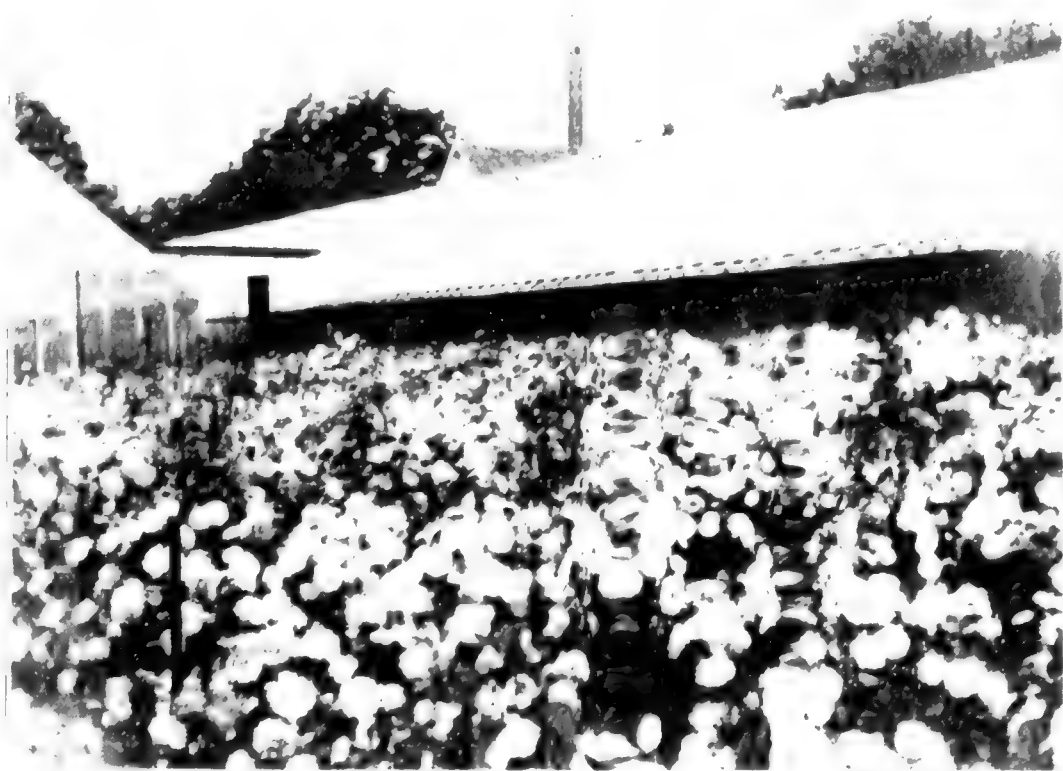

It is best to sow the late asters a month or so later than the others. They can be sown at intervals of two or three weeks, up to about June 1, for a succession of blooms. As soon as the weather will permit, late asters will do best if sown in a cold frame or out in the open, on a well prepared seed bed. If started in that way, they would also be better for transplanting. The lands should be well manured and plowed the fall before, if possible. When the plants have started to grow in the field, they should be cultivated quite frequently throughout the season, to hold the moisture.

I do not know of anyone using mosquito netting or tobacco cloth. I have grown asters successfully in an apple orchard where the trees were a good distance apart. They seem to grow in almost any soil, but the soil that holds moisture well without being too wet seems to be about right for them. The first asters I ever saw were grown on a clay soil; the earliest out seem to like a lighter soil.

From Purssell & Cragg Co.

In reply to your request for an answer to the question of R. L., we can only give our personal experience as gained in growing asters in a small way. Aster seedlings are usually transplanted from the seed bed or box, in order to get sturdy plants for setting out in the field. The plants are not put out early for the purpose of securing early bloom, except in the case of early varieties, but in order to take advantage of the cooler weather and get them established before it is too hot and dry. If there are facilities for irrigating, the later varieties can be put out in June or later. We have never seen any advantage in growing asters in partial shade; the stems might grow longer, but it would be at the expense of the flowers.

Asters Grown by Chas. W. Curtis, Irondequoit, N. Y.

We should not want to grow asters between the rows of corn, etc.; the stronger species of plants would rob the weaker ones.

Asters seem to be more successfully grown by the market gardener or farmer than by the florist, mainly, perhaps, because the gardener or farmer is not confined to a small plot of land, but is able to give his plants general field culture, such as he gives his corn and potatoes, and has plenty of room for horse cultivation; above all, he is able to use fresh, untainted land every season. Novices have often grown splendid asters at their first attempt, when their land was new, but each successive crop, if planted in the same land year after year, became less and less satisfactory. Much of the success attained by the individual grower comes from having well drained land. Heavy showers after a prolonged dry spell often mean ruin to an aster crop if the soil is left soggy.

From Charles W. Curtis.

In reply to R. L.'s inquiry, I will try to describe as far as possible the way in which I grow my asters. While I do not grow as many of them as some of my neighbors, I do not think anyone could find much fault with the quality of my stock. I sow all my seed in the greenhouse. I then transplant them into coldframes, leaving them there till the weather is such that they can be planted out with safety. I find that I overcome two difficulties in this way. In the first place, I prevent a good deal of disease by planting them in coldframes. In the second place, the plants become hardened in the frames, so that, if the weather gets cold after they are planted out, it does not hurt them.

In planting them in the field, I find it advisable to plant them in rows two and one-half feet apart, with the plants about one foot apart in the rows. Thus I can use a horse in cultivating them and this is a great deal more satisfactory than the hand cultivator. I also irrigate a good deal, which largely accounts for my having good stock. In regard to shading, I think it might be practical to cover the asters with mosquito netting. I do not think, however, that they could be grown between rows of corn or sunflowers with any success.

I am sending you a photograph of one of my beds of asters. The photograph was taken after most of the A-No. 1 blossoms had been picked off. These asters were planted two and one-half feet apart.

From H. Merritt.

I am not one of the largest growers of asters, as I usually plant only about one-half acre, which can be used nicely in my home trade, but I am willing to give you the benefit of my limited experience. The first important point is the selection of seed. I usually try to save the largest part of my own seed, selecting nothing but the choicest blooms for that purpose. The seed plants are all staked and labeled and left until the seed is ready to be gathered.

Asters may be sown any time after the middle of February. For an early crop most growers prefer Queen of the Market or Early Wonder. After the seed is up and ready to transplant, the plants are transferred to flats or pots. Pots are preferable, as the pot-grown stock can be planted in the field without disturbing the roots. It is a good plan to have them in coldframes and well hardened off before planting in the field, as they are then in better condition to stand the cold weather which is liable to come after they are planted out.

We find that Mikado and Crego are good midseason asters, and that Crego is the better of these two. Our best Crego blooms usually sell at about $1 per dozen, retail, about twice as much as can be got here for any other variety. For a late crop we use Vick's Branching, which we consider the best of the late sorts.

We always transplant all of our aster plants once before putting them out in the field, as we find it is a great advantage to have a ball of soil on each plant, for they then start much better in the field and produce much better blooms. The land where we plant our asters is well manured and plowed in the fall. It is plowed again in the spring, and smoothed over ready for marking. We plant so that we can cultivate both ways, allowing about sixteen to eighteen inches of space one way and about fourteen inches the other way, as asters like plenty of cultivation and a good, rich soil. Once or twice in a season we give them a liberal allowance of sheep manure, trying to time this so as to apply it just before a rain. We have always found that a little fertilizer pays well for itself in making up the high-grade blooms.

Sweet Peas

A GROWER'S NOTES.

[A paper by Chas. B. Weaver, of Ronks, Pa., read before the Lancaster City and County Florists' Club, April 18, 1912.]

Having been given a broad scope to write on, I will treat each phase of the subject briefly, as I know it.

We began the culture of sweet peas commercially twelve or fourteen years ago, in a small way, with more or less disappointment financially. The start was with a row about fifty feet long, of the old pink and white variety, Earliest of All. This row, as I remember, bloomed during the spring months and paid only moderately well. Right here I wish to mention that on questioning S. S. Pennock, of Philadelphia, as to the advisability of growing sweet peas to be in bloom at Christmas, I received for an answer that if it were possible to produce peas at that time it would be next to impossible to sell them.

However, the following winter, owing to stem-rot in carnations, I again sowed peas in one bed, 5x140. These flowers I did not attempt to market in Philadelphia, but shipped them to Pittsburgh, with not highly satisfactory results until toward spring, when they gradually increased in value.

The following season two beds were planted, one with Earliest of All, the other with a variety not now in cultivation, named Josephine White. In this year's experience the Earliest of All were affected with a disease that delayed their blooming period until nearly spring. The Josephine White opened a few flowers in November and I remember shipping fifty flowers to Philadelphia, for which I received 50 cents, which caused me to feel encouraged, but this was of short duration, as the week following all I received was a stroke with a blue pencil, accompanied by a note saying that peas were more of a spring flower in their market.

After this, what peas I had were shipped again to Pittsburgh for several months, or until warmer weather, when I received word that they were arriving in poor condition, which was more the fault of the variety, Josephine White, which was a miserable keeper.

Some High Easter Prices.

After receiving this word, my only recourse was again to ship to Philadelphia; this was, as I remember, about three weeks before Easter. From the first shipment, according to my recollection, the peas sold well in spite of their quality. They continued to sell well until some time after Easter. It may seem peculiar, but this same Easter I received the highest price for peas I ever received, before or since; the largest part of my Easter crop realized from $1.50 to $2.50 per hundred. I well remember that one retailer in Philadelphia bought 800 from my commission man, paying him $2.50 per hundred, and then made complaint that they kept poorly and asked that the price be reduced to $1.50, which I was glad to do, and I did not blame the kicker, either. I want to say in fairness that $2.50 per hundred is too high a price for sweet peas to sell at, even during the holiday season, but of course this price was not refused.

From this time on, about eight years ago, peas began to sell in Philadelphia in midwinter, although in a moderate way at first, until at the present time tens of thousands are disposed of during the Christmas holidays. Other cities, too, for a time, did not take to these flowers during midwinter, but now I venture to say that few cities of fair size in this country are without peas more than three months of the year, and in many they are an all-year-round flower.

Duplicate Varieties.

Formerly there was little choice of varieties, say two or three. Now, owing to the labors of different men, there are possibly two dozen different colors and shades of winter flowering sweet peas, although there is some confusion through duplication of names, which in my opinion should be looked into by the National Sweet Pea Society. For instance, a grower might decide that he would try several varieties of white, and buy from the different sources the following: Watchung, Earliest White and Snowbird or Snowdrift, and find at blooming time that he had four rows of the same variety. Also the only difference between Christmas Pink and Earliest of All is the price of the seed. Mont Blanc, Christmas White and Florence Denzer, too, are identical.

Antirrhinums Grown in Solid Beds by James Wheeler, Natick, Mass.

I want to say in connection with this that no man in this country, or in the world for that matter, has done more toward the advancement of winter flowering sweet peas than Anton Zvolanek, of Bound Brook, N. J. He has to the present time succeeded in producing practically all of the colors that we have among the summer blooming varieties in the winter blooming section, and I am informed that he is now at work on the Spencer varieties and, in fact, has partly subdued them to the winter blooming habit.

Many of the colors that Zvolanek has succeeded in fixing to type have as yet to prove salable, but as the field broadens we can expect a wider range of colors to become popular.

Good Commercial Varieties.

At the present time the old pink and white variety, Earliest of All or Christmas Pink, is the best seller, followed by white of the different varieties, and these followed by lavender, of which I will mention the following: Mrs. Alexander Wallace, and Wallacea, dark lavender, and I believe these are not so likely to drop their buds as Mrs. Charles H. Totty, although this is the most desirable shade of the three. In the light pink class we have Mrs. Dolansky, Mrs. Wm. Sim and one or two others that are not so desirable. The variety Mrs. Sim will produce longer stems than any other variety in cultivation under like conditions; the color is pretty when first picked out, but, when slightly faded, soon shows too much salmon, while Mrs. Dolansky, although not quite so bright when first opening, holds a uniform coloring throughout. Governor Fort is a fine color and should become popular, as should Pink Beauty, although this has to be proven in most markets. Of the striped purple and violet shades little can be said in a commercial way at present.

The Seed.

I have read opinions of different growers relative to seed from different localities producing better results, some holding that California seed produces weaker growth, that is responsible for different diseases, in comparison with home-grown seed. With these opinions I do not agree, as for hardness of shell and good germination California seed can not be surpassed.

I have grown some seed of a few special varieties and find it an expensive undertaking, as, in addition to having to carefully support the vines, I find it necessary at intervals to shake the vines to secure thorough pollination; also when the pods begin to dry they must be picked off every few days, owing to a tendency to burst open and scatter the seed. This trouble, of course, is seldom met with in California, as the climate there is more dry and not so changeable at seeding time.

Usually the first sowing is made about the middle of August with us. Some growers sow earlier, I understand. August is a troublesome time to sow peas, as the intense heat we often experience at this time is entirely adverse to the conditions this plant will thrive in.

Diseases and Other Troubles.

We often have trouble with the tender vines damping off at the ground—in fact, on more than one occasion to the extent of fifty or 100 feet of row. I have tried different methods to prevent this trouble. I have used lime in the soil at planting time, sterilized with formaldehyde and tried keeping the soil both wet and dry, and have come to the conclusion that a practical preventive is a well dampened soil at sowing time and care to keep conditions as uniform as possible.

We have with us a disease called black rot, which seems to be the most troublesome during extremely hot weather. I have on several occasions sown an entire house which became affected with this disease. It is noticeable soon after the vines appear above the surface of the ground by their stunted, yellowish appearance. The roots, on examination, are black for several inches of their length below the surface of the soil; also many of the rootlets are entirely rotted off. If one has patience, with the coming of cooler weather many of the vines will send out new roots and make a fair growth of vine, but never as good as those not affected. My method usually is to make a furrow beside the diseased rows and sow a fresh supply of seed, usually with good results, as the second sowing, while in the same soil, was naturally made considerably later in the season.

Dodging Disease.

This present season, owing to a fear of again having this disease to contend with, I planted another crop in the house in summer and delayed sowing peas until the beginning of October,

WHEELER'S SNAPDRAGON.

The illustration shows one of James Wheeler's fine beds of pink snapdragons at Natick, Mass. Mr. Wheeler picked sixty-five dozen spikes from this particular bed for Easter and as many more the week following, all of the finest quality. While Mr. Wheeler specializes in carnations, he finds good sale for snapdragons and the call for cuttings comes from nearly all parts of the country.

MY MARYLAND.

Growing It Without a Rest.

In this article I should like to give the readers the benefit of our experiments with a house of My Maryland. The figures I intend to use to bear out my statements are as accurate as we can get them, and I hope they will be appreciated as trustworthy.

We experimented with a small three-quarter-span house. The benches were made of cement, with a tile bottom, and held only 1,146 plants. Our experiments date from August 1, 1909. In that year the plants were planted in the bench out of 4-inch pots. From August 1, 1909, to July 31, 1910, the figures on our books show that we cut 36,872 blooms.

These plants were not rested during the season of 1910 and 1911, but were kept growing continuously. We removed some of the dead wood, but not enough to check the growth of the plants. From August 1, 1910, to July 31, 1911, the books show a cut of 45,962 blooms, which means a fraction over forty blooms per plant.

Last fall the plants were not disturbed, except to remove the dead wood. This house remained in bloom until January 17, 1912, at which time the temperature was lowered to 45 degrees at night. This temperature was maintained until February 17, when it was raised to 64 degrees at night. The crop came in splendidly for Easter. During Easter week we cut 3,126 blooms off these 1,146 plants.

From August 1, 1911, to April 8, 1912, we cut 28,624 blooms. The total cut from this house for a little over two and one-half years was 111,458. And remember that the plants have produced this amount without a rest, or at least as nearly so as possible.

Advantages of the Method.

Why did we make this experiment? It is an accepted principle among most growers that roses need a certain amount of rest or drying off each year in order to produce prolific growth and the requisite quality of blooms. We thought it was not necessary and wanted to prove it to our own satisfaction. And I have just given you the results.

We have not only experimented with My Maryland, but with the Killarneys also, with about equally favorable results.

What is the advantage of growing roses without a rest? Why, it means that you are cutting roses in the summer, while otherwise you would lose nearly two months of time and blooms, to say nothing of the expense. It also does away with this new idea of summer rose houses. Keep them growing the year around and, when they are grown out, start again.

Probably some of the readers will wonder by what secret process we kept them blooming steadily and for such a length of time. There is no secret about it; it is just good old manure and plenty of it.

My Maryland at our plant is carried at a temperature of 64 degrees at night. We probably give it more water than any other rose, as the soft, succulent growth seems to require great quantities of it. As to mulching, I need only say that we believe in putting it on by the ton.

BEST ROSES FOR DAKOTAS.

Please name about twenty-nine of the hardiest roses for North Dakota, where the soil and water contain a large amount of alkali. Kindly state, also, how to control the red spider outdoors.
P. J. K.

It is not probable that any two men would name the same twenty-five varieties of roses as being the best for any one locality. Believing, however, that the soil and the climatic conditions of Devils Lake, N. D., are nearly the same as in my locality, Minneapolis, Minn., I would personally try the following varieties in my own garden:

For white—Frau Karl Druschki, Margaret Dickson, Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, Maman Cochet, Mabel Morrison, Augustine Guinoisseau. For red and its shades—Gruss an Teplitz, Richmond, Papa Gontier, Ferdinand Jamain, Oscar Cordel, Jules Margottin, Robert Duncan, Dean Hole, Marie Baumann. For rose or pink—Anne de Diesbach, Clio, Mme. Gabriel Luizet, Caroline Testout, Killarney, La France, Mme. Abel Chateau, Victor Verdier, Heinrich Schultheis, Mrs. John Laing, Captain Christy. Theodore Wirth.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Hardy Annuals.

If a sowing of the hardier annuals has not yet been made outdoors, now is a good time to get them in the ground. It is not good policy to wait until the ground is warm and dry, as is too often done, for the hardier annuals succeed far better if they are sown while the ground is cool and comparatively moist. These annuals are frequently ignored as being of little or no account; in fact, there are many florists who think that asters and sweet peas are the only hardy annuals worth growing for cutting. These two latter are undoubtedly the two most valuable annuals, but there are a number of others which every country florist should give room for a row or two. Among these are mignonette, sweet alyssum, candytuft, gypsophila, larkspurs, pink, white and lavender; lupines, schizanthus, Shirley poppy, gaillardia, Centaurea Cyanus, Centaurea moschata, Arctotis grandis, Dimorphotheca aurantiaca and coreopsis. It will be necessary to make a successional sowing a month later of some of these annuals and in the case of Shirley poppy several sowings. Be sure the ground is thoroughly pulverized where the seeds are sown and work the cultivator among them just as soon as they appear above the ground. Also, do not neglect hand weeding.

Cosmos.

Cosmos is a useful fall annual. There are early types which flower more or less through the summer, but these are less valuable than that fine variety Lady Lenox. South of New Jersey this last variety can be depended upon to flower well outdoors, but it is otherwise farther north. Some years a late frost will allow of their flowering freely, but this is the exception rather than the rule, and to secure really good flowers and be certain of getting them, greenhouse culture is necessary. It is a common mistake to sow cosmos too early. Start the seed now and they will be of ample size. They can be planted outdoors, given one or two pinches and lifted carefully before frost; or, better still, they can be grown in good sized pots, which can be plunged and securely staked, moving them indoors toward the end of September, or earlier if frost threatens. These cosmos are invaluable for cutting and, grown cool, can easily be kept flowering until Christmas.

Montbretias.

Next to gladioli the montbretias are one of the most useful of bulbs to plant for producing flowers for cutting. They are not nearly so much seen in the markets in summer as their merits warrant. They grow and flower with a minimum of care, ship well, keep well in water and, if not all planted at once, a long succession of flowers may be had. The best way to secure a continuous crop is to plant some in the fall, taking up the too thick rows and severely thinning them. Mulch these well and they will winter safely if water does not stand about them. Then store a quantity of bulbs in any cool cellar where there is no fire heat. Plant some of these out as soon as the ground is open and a month later plant a further batch. This will ensure flowers from July to October. Good old varieties are Etoile de Feu, scarlet; Rayon d'Or, yellow; crocosmaeflora, orange-red; and of the large-flowered newer sorts, Germania, George Davison and Prometheus are fine.

Hardy Lilies.

The best time to plant lilies outdoors is of course in late fall, but sometimes it is not possible to do the planting then. Not infrequently bulbs are received late and are carried over winter in a cold cellar in pots. Where this was done, the bulbs should be planted out at once. Set them considerably below the surface of the pots, in order that the roots may be eight to ten inches below the surface and away from the constant diggings affecting the surface soil. These and in fact all other liliiums should be planted where they will not come in direct contact with anything in the shape of fresh manure. They are all much benefited, however, by a mulch of well decayed manure at this season. The old white garden lily will now have its spikes a foot or more in height. This is an opportune time to spray it thoroughly with Bordeaux mixture. Repeat the spraying once in ten days from now until the flowering time, to prevent the blight which so often attacks it in June.

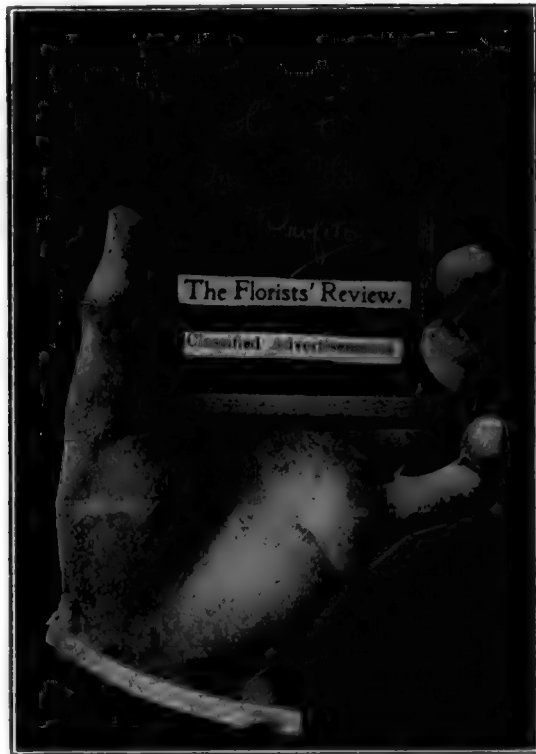

English Ivy.

Where a good batch of English ivy cuttings were rooted in the winter and where these plants are still occupying valuable space in the greenhouses, they can be moved forthwith to coldframes or plunged at once in the nursery, covering the pots well. Possibly they may need a watering or two in spells of prolonged drought and should therefore be plunged within reach of the hose. They will make rapid growth treated thus and will be strong stock for fall sales, or they can be wintered cold and held for spring sales. Plants a few months old are of course salable, but if they are plunged outdoors and given a shift into 4-inch or 5-inch pots and tied up, when potted they will easily realize three times the money of the younger plants. English ivy is an excellent plant for vases, window boxes, piazza boxes, for cemetery lots or for basket work and, given a northern exposure against a wall, will withstand zero weather and considerably lower.

Bulb Beds.

The covering will, of course, have been removed from bulb beds for some time. They make rapid growth with the first warm days and many will already be in flower. If time permits, stir the surface soil of the beds with a small hand fork, as the mulch lying on it all winter bakes it considerably.

Where your customers want a nice groundwork below the bulbs, this is the time to plant out forget-me-nots, pansies, violas, arabis and other spring flowers. In planting these out, however, be careful to select colors which will harmonize well with the bulbs. For instance, white or yellow pansies will look well as a base for scarlet, pink or crimson tulips. Red under pink tulips would be distressing, as would blue, while under yellow or white they would be in excellent taste. In mixed beds it is best to use light groundworks.

Soil for Vases and Window Boxes.

It may seem a trifle early to mention window boxes, but it is time to prepare the soil to be used for them, rather than scurry around and hastily prepare it at the planting season. As the rooting space is limited in boxes and vases, the soil should be tolerably rich. Two-thirds good pasture loam, one-third well decayed cow manure and a 3-inch potful of fine bone to each basket make a good compost. If this compost can be prepared now and get one mixing before it is used it will be in prime shape. Unless the loam is heavy there is no need to use any sand, but a few shovels of soot will be beneficial in keeping worms in check and making the foliage of the plants a rich, dark green color.

KILIAN AND HIS PLANT.

At Raspeburg, Md., John G. Kilian does a prosperous business, growing a general line of stock. The accompanying illustration gives three views of his place, two of them snapshots by himself, and in the picture of the carnation house, which was made early in the season, Mr. Kilian is seen with his daughter.

"In building my last two greenhouses, which have 10,000 square feet of glass surface, I paid particular attention to the heating," says Mr. Kilian. "To operate the heating apparatus each year was an annual expense which made the fixed charges on my business higher or lower, according to the plant installed, so after I had considered this matter, I decided to place this heating proposition in the hands of Heer Bros., of Baltimore, who were recommended as heating experts. I gave them full sway in the matter, and they installed for me a 28-5 Juniata water boiler, made by the National Radiator Co., of Johnstown, Pa. This boiler has a grate surface of 33x32 inches. All my neighboring florists claimed that the boiler was too small, but after using it for two seasons, I find that it does the work amply, and when 7 degrees below zero outside I had a temperature of 140 degrees on the boiler, and maintained a temperature of 55 degrees in the greenhouses. My cost of fuel averages $1 per season to 100 feet of glass surface, which is a great deal less than the cost for the same amount of glass of my neighboring florists. I write this as I feel that florists in general neglect one of the most important features of greenhouse construction, namely, the heating. If any of my neighboring florists can beat this, in the cost of heating their greenhouses, I would like to hear from them."

Carnations

STIGMONOSE ON ENCHANTRESS.

I am enclosing under separate cover some samples of Enchantress carnations that are affected with a disease with which I am not familiar. The leaves begin drying at the tips and the trouble seems to be general throughout the varieties of Enchantress. I have some fly in my carnation houses, due to the fact that I cannot fumigate with gas on account of the night man. Could this be the reason for the trouble? I shall be grateful for any help.

W. T. M.

Your plants are suffering from stigmonose, which is causing those yellow spots and the yellow tips on the leaves. If you cannot fumigate, try spraying with one of the nicotine preparations. Go after them strongly now, or you will have a hard time with them after warm weather sets in.

A. F. J. B.

RIGHT TIME TO WATER.

Which is considered the better time to water carnations, in the morning or evening, from now till June? Will the plants need spraying in the middle of the day?

J. A. & S.

There is no question that the proper time to water almost any plant, and the carnation in particular, is in the forenoon. This does not necessarily mean, however, that watering should not be done in the afternoon under certain conditions or at certain times of the year. The idea to keep in mind, when arranging your watering schedule, is to allow no undue drying out at the roots at any time, and to prevent that it becomes necessary at times to water in spots in the latter part of the day. This usually happens on windy days. It is also expedient to have the foliage dry by night, if possible. Wet foliage during the night is not a good thing for most plants, and specially for carnations. It is apt to bring on diseases, such as leaf-spot, fairy ring, etc.

Spraying during the middle of the day to prevent wilting should be resorted to only in extreme cases. You will find that usually a good damping down of the walks will answer the purpose of moistening the atmosphere, which is all that is needed. One of the most severe cases of fairy ring I have ever come across was brought on by frequent spraying of the plants during the heat of the day. These were young plants, benched from pots, and under this treatment they grew rapidly until the disease started. To have allowed the plants to flag a little for a few days would have hardened the growth enough to withstand the hot sun, and while the growth would have been less rapid, it would have been harder and less liable to disease.

You will find that a good mulch of loose material, about an inch thick, will do your plants a world of good in the way of preventing the soil from drying out. With such a mulch on, one watering each day should be enough, and let that be given before noon if possible.

A. F. J. B.

FAIRY RING.

Please tell me the name of the disease on the enclosed carnation leaves.

W. B.

The spots you notice on the leaves of your carnations are fairy ring. Pick off all you can and then spray the plants thoroughly with Bordeaux mixture. The weather ought to be in your favor now and you should have no trouble in ridding your plants of this disease. Dispense with syringing altogether for a while, unless you see red spider on the plants.

A. F. J. B.

YELLOW TIPS ON ENCHANTRESS.

I am sending you, under separate cover, some carnation growths which have brown tips and look as if they had been burnt. Last season thrips got the upper hand on my place, but this season I sprayed with To-bak-in every two weeks and have kept the plants clean, to the best of my knowledge. The growths which I am sending you are among the worst. The variety is Enchantress.

A. C. U.

The yellow tips you complain of are frequently seen on the Enchantress varieties at this time of the year. I am not quite positive, but think they are caused by thrips. They get into the young growth and feed the same as they do in the buds. Your spraying has undoubtedly kept them down among the lower growth and, while they do enough damage there, it is not so bad as to have them feeding on the blooms. It is rather late now to expect to do anything which may improve the cut before the end of the season. The damage is done while the young shoots are quite small and does not become apparent until they grow out some time later.

You will, of course, want to rid your place of the pest and perhaps the means to accomplish this would be to use hydrocyanic acid gas. One or two applications should clear them out.

A. F. J. B.

WANTED—THE BEST RED.

Which is the best all-round red carnation? I have seen it stated that Beacon is a bad splitter. I want one that does not split so much.

W. B.

Beacon and Victory have for several years been considered the two standard scarlet carnations. Each has its merits and its faults, but each is strong where the other is weak and growers have found it advantageous to grow both. Last year Bonfire was disseminated and it has found favor with many growers. Its principal fault is in its lack of size. Scarlet Glow would be a winner in the commercial class, except for a weak stem early in the season. If your soil is heavy it may prove satisfactory. St. Nicholas is a new-comer and will yet have to prove its worth away from its native heath.

A. F. J. B.

CUTTINGS NOT MADE RIGHT.

Enclosed are two cuttings of White Wonder. Kindly note the slit in the stem and the brown fungus. This is the way they came from the cutting bench, most of them being lightly rooted. After they were potted five days, they withered up and died. I have 1,000 that are more or less affected. Kindly let me know what the trouble is.

J. C. N.

Your cuttings are not made right and that is most likely the reason they are acting the way they are. When trimming the cutting, cut just at a joint and then take off all of the lower pair of leaves clear to the stem. Do not leave the stub of a leaf on the stem, as it will rot and cause you just the kind of trouble you are complaining of. There is also some leaf-spot on them, which is probably caused by too much spraying overhead. Cuttings like these will not make first-class stock, even if you succeed in getting them to grow.

Canton, Ill.—The greenhouses established over thirty years ago by Balthasar Jacobs are now the property of Geo. W. Jacobs, the eldest of the five sons. Mrs. B. Jacobs, who has managed the business as administratrix for the last fourteen years, will enjoy a well-earned rest.

REACHING THE BUYERS.

Whenever an advertiser makes use of testimonials The Review is in the habit of checking them with its subscription list. Two objects are in view: In a trade growing so rapidly as our own it is impossible that there should be any complete list, and The Review always is on the lookout for new names; and, second, it is interesting to note what proportion of the satisfied customers any concern finds among Review subscribers. Even with the concerns that have the most elaborate sales organizations it often develops that their business practically all comes from Review readers. For instance, the McCray Refrigerator Co., Kendallville, Ind., has just issued the most elaborate catalogue of florists' refrigerators ever published in the United States. It is a dandy in every respect, and in it there are reproductions of sixteen letters from florists who evidently have found the refrigerators as good as the printing. Of the sixteen florists who gave testimonials, two firms have since undergone changes and are now out of business. Of the remaining fourteen, twelve are subscribers to The Review, while the other two are subscribers whose time has elapsed and whose names now are being carried in the suspense list while the subscriptions are in process of collection. In addition to these testimonials the catalogue contains illustrations of three stores in which McCray refrigerators are used, but for which there are no accompanying letters. Of these stores, one has ceased to exist, while the other two are conducted by subscribers to The Review.

In view of the fact that the McCray Refrigerator Co. has agencies in all the principal cities, it is important to note that nevertheless their sales are made to Review subscribers.

ALLAMANDAS.

Keep the pot plants of Allamanda Williamsi in a light, sunny house. They do not need any shade, at least not for a while. If any shoots have a runaway tendency, pinch them back. As soon as the pots are well filled with roots, start to feed regularly and keep it up until the flowering season is over. Allamandas, no matter whether in small pots or climbers in big tubs, respond readily to feedings, both in the form of liquid manures and top-dressings. It is a common fallacy to imagine that these plants must have stove heat. As a matter of fact, after the middle of May they are vastly better in every way with ordinary greenhouse culture, being much stockier and lasting better for decorative purposes than when grown in a warm, moist, stuffy house.

RHODODENDRONS.

This is the time to plant broad-leaved evergreens, of which we unfortunately have a great paucity in all but the warmest states. Rhododendrons must not have a soil containing any lime, or they will be failures. Dryness at the root in summer is probably responsible for more winter losses than winter cold. Then, again, growers purchase the cheap plants grafted on R. Ponticum, stock which is not hardy in any of the northern states. Those worked on R. Catawbiense or R. maximum can be relied on. Peat soil is not necessary. Clay loam must be well lightened with sand, leaf-mold and old decayed manure. Light loam, inclined to be sandy, is ideal. Beds should be trenched two or three feet apart and should never be given a southern exposure. Rhododendrons like to be broken from the morning sun. They should be well mulched with leaves after planting, and this mulch should never be removed except when it may be found necessary to water the beds during periods of abnormal drought, when its temporary removal only is needed.

A few reliable hardy varieties which can be depended upon are: Atrosanguineum, Charles Dickens and Charles Bagley, red; Everestianum and purpureum elegans, purple; C. S. Sargent and H. W. Sargent, crimson; roseum elegans, Mrs. C. S. Sargent and delicatissimum, rose and pink; album elegans, album grandiflorum and Boule de Neige, white. Added to these might be the varieties Catawbiense bicolor, lilac to rose, and maximum, which varies in color from white to rose, being usually light pink. For a really good half dozen, plant Charles Dickens, delicatissimum, album elegans, roseum elegans, Everestianum and C. S. Sargent.

A CALGARY STORE.

Calgary has a far away sound, and far away, indeed, it is: as far west as Salt Lake City and as far north as Quebec and Winnipeg. But that Calgary is a good flower town is apparent from the accompanying illustration, which shows the interior of the downtown store of the Campbell Floral Co., the greenhouses backing which are near by, at Hillhurst. T. W. Campbell says the store is 12 x 65 but that the mirrored walls give the effect of much greater size.

The second illustration is from a photograph made in the show house of the Kerrison Floral Co., Ltd., Calgary, just before Easter. E. E. Kerrison is the chief proprietor and manager. He has six greenhouses in roses, carnations, etc. The show house is at the rear of the store.

Ilion, N. Y.—Ward G. Gordon, whose greenhouses were destroyed by fire early in the winter, has rebuilt them, making them larger and more modern and using concrete construction as much as possible. Being a young man, in the senior year at high school, he has industriously developed his business during his spare hours and he does not seem to be discouraged by his reverses.

OBITUARY.

P. G. Hallberg.

P. G. Hallberg, for many years a nurseryman at Emporia, Kan., died at his home in that city April 11, after an illness of several months. He was born in Stockholm, Sweden, June 4, 1831. He came west with his wife and lived for a time in Illinois, removing to Emporia in 1858. He started a bakery and later ran a general merchandise store, in both of which he was highly skilled, and in 1873 he went into the nursery business just outside of Emporia. The Hallberg nursery made much money for its owner and he became one of the wealthy men of the town. He had been a director of the Emporia National Bank since 1887, and was its oldest official. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow and a Mystic Shriner. He leaves a wife and one son, Chas. G. Hallberg, a florist in Emporia.

Mrs. Byron H. Ives.

After suffering nearly four years from a complication of diseases, Mrs. Julia Ives, 52 years old, wife of Byron Henry Ives, a well known florist of Albuquerque, N. M., died April 11, at the family home, Fourth street and Santa Fe avenue. It had been known for some weeks that Mrs. Ives could not live long, but the news of her death came, nevertheless, as a severe shock to her numerous friends in Albuquerque, where she was a pioneer resident, having come to that city with Mr. Ives, a bride from New York, more than twenty years ago. Mrs. Ives was stricken with typhoid fever some four years ago and this disease was followed by an attack of diabetes, which brought on the complications that culminated in her death.

She was a lover of art and of flowers, and to her belonged much of the credit for the planning of the Ives flower establishment, one of the most prosperous in the southwest. She was a devout member of the Lead Avenue Methodist church. Besides her church and charity work, she took a prominent part in the work of the Woman's Club, and was one of those most active in causing the club building to be built.

John Smith.

Cleveland, O., has lost one of its pioneer florists in the death of John Smith, whose demise occurred Sunday, April 21. He was well known among the craft throughout the country, having been in business in Cleveland over fifty years. He retired from active connection with the trade in 1901. He was an old soldier, having served through the Civil war in the Fourth Ohio cavalry. His wife and four children survive him. One of his sons, Geo. W. Smith, is manager of the Cleveland Florists' Exchange. Interment was at Lakeview cemetery. F. A. F.

James Borden.

James Borden, who was in business as a florist in Boston for a number of years, but had lately been living with his sister, Mrs. Cassie B. Gilmore, at 209 College avenue, Somerville, Mass., died of pernicious anemia at the Massachusetts General Hospital, April 11. He had been an invalid over a year. He was born at Avonport, N. S., sixty-three years ago. For the last thirty years he had lived in Boston and Brookline with Mrs. Gilmore; his wife died several years ago. He was a member of Boston Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Red Cross Lodge, K. of P., of East Boston. He leaves another sister, Mrs. Fred Woodman, in Wolfville, N. S.

M. Rice.

The news of the death of M. Rice, which occurred at his home in Oak Lane, near Philadelphia, at 12:30 a. m. Tuesday, April 23, will bring a feeling of personal bereavement to many florists all over the land. The shock of Mr. Rice's death comes with almost as much suddenness to his business associates as it will to his friends. Those who were in close touch with him during his five months' illness felt until within a few days that his tremendous will power would triumph. Scarcely a week ago it was believed to be but a question of a short time before Mr. Rice would be back at his work. Then came a change for the worse from which he never rallied.

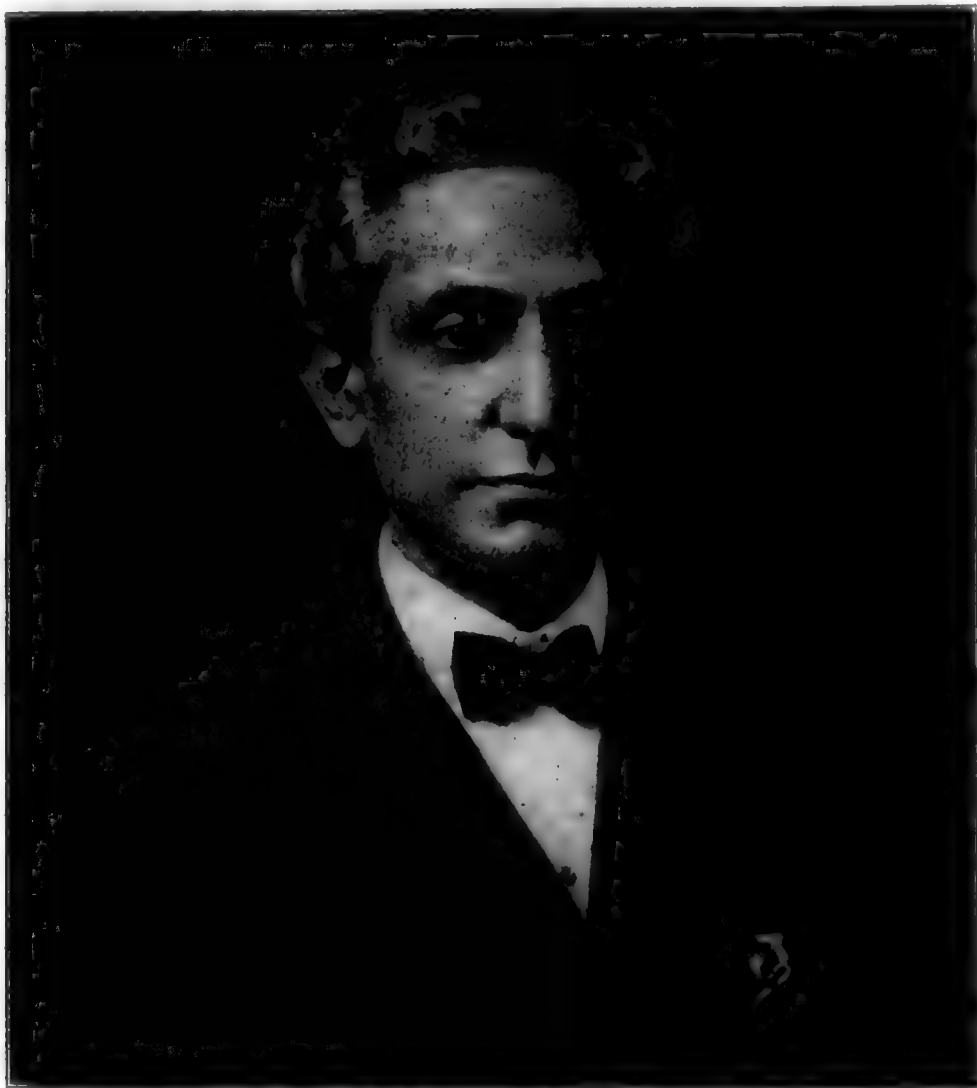

Possessed of a genial personality, a high sense of integrity, and sound business judgment, Mr. Rice won and held the respect and admiration of all with whom he came in personal or business contact. A tireless worker, careful and systematic in all that he undertook, his success in business will be an inspiration to many young men. Starting as a poor boy with his own way to make, twenty-six years of faithful work saw him at the head of a house known and respected all over this country and in Europe, no small achievement for what may be fairly termed a pioneer enterprise.

M. Rice was born in Detroit August 24, 1864. He moved to Philadelphia in 1875, when 11 years of age. After a year or two at school he worked for eight years, spending most of his leisure time at the flower shop of his friend, Eugene Weiss, where he learned the needs of florists. In 1885, with Mr. Weiss and one of his employees, Mr. Rice formed a partnership under the name of the Philadelphia Immortelle Design Co. Mr. Weiss's knowledge of flower designing and his employee's cheerful handiwork furnished the made-up designs, while Mr. Rice had to sell them. This was uphill work at first, but after a week's effort Mr. Rice found a man in a town up the state who wanted the goods. From that time Mr. Rice believed thoroughly in the need for florists' supplies, a need that he has helped to direct and develop with wonderful rapidity for over a quarter of a century. The rapid growth of Mr. Rice's business will be remembered by all who read of his silver anniversary just before Thanksgiving, 1910. Suffice it to say here that his partner and faithful friend, Bernard Eschner, joined him in 1899 and that in 1905 they removed to their new building at 1220 Race street, a move which has advanced the name of M. Rice & Co. to the highest point of business fame. Mr. Rice is survived by a widow, who was Miss Annie Wolff, of this city, sister of Julius Wolff, Jr. Mr. Rice was a member of the Masonic orders and of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia.

Funeral services will be held from Mr. Rice's late residence in Oak Lane at 2 p. m. Thursday, April 25. Phil.

William Thomson.

The death of William Thomson, head of William Thomson & Co., seedsmen,

M. Rice.

Edinburgh, Scotland, occurred March 25. Mr. Thomson was 76 years of age and had built up an international business.

David Cooper.

David Cooper, retail florist at 615 Dundas street, Toronto, was found dead April 18 at the entrance to High park, as the result of a stroke of apoplexy. Before going into business for himself Mr. Cooper was employed by John H. Dunlop.

William G. Grant.

William G. Grant, a well-known landscape gardener and florist, died April 14 at his home, 292 Gaskill street, Woonsocket, R. I., in his forty-first year, after a long illness of cancer. Mr. Grant underwent two operations, one at his home and one at the Woonsocket hospital nine months ago, in hopes of prolonging his life. His condition was serious and everything that medical science could do was attempted, but the disease gradually weakened his constitution.

Mr. Grant was an esteemed resident of Woonsocket for about twenty-one years. He was employed by John W. Ellis up to five years ago, when he went into the landscape and gardening business for himself. He was born at Little River, Nova Scotia, the son of John F. and Ellen Grant, both of whom survive him. He was married twelve years ago to Bertha M. Isenor, who survives him. At the funeral, April 17, the nurserymen, gardeners and florists of the vicinity united in sending a handsome tribute of respect in the form of a large floral pillow.

W. H. M.

Mrs. John Meikle.

Mrs. John Meikle, mother of Andrew

S. Meikle, president of the Newport Horticultural Society of Newport, R. I., died at her home on Meikle avenue, in that city, April 11, aged 76 years, never having rallied from the effects of an operation performed a few days previously. She was a native of Scotland and with her husband celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of her wedding about five years ago. Her husband, four sons and three daughters survive her. At the funeral, the floral tributes were numerous and beautiful and the pall bearers were all members of the Horticultural Society, namely, Robert Patterson, John T. Allen, Hugh Williamson, William MacKay, John A. Forbes and Robert A. Smith.

TWO FORMS OF TRADESCANTIA.

I am sending you two samples of a plant commonly called the wandering Jew. I should like to know the exact name of each variety. If you can give the information I shall much appreciate it.

H. D.

Both are forms of Tradescantia Virginica. The darker variegated sort is called both T. Virginica Zebrina and multicolor, and the light variety is T. Virginica argentea variegata.

Moninger is supplying the material and work will be started immediately.

P. G. Hallberg.

P. G. Hallberg, for many years a nurseryman at Emporia, Kan., died at his home in that city April 11, after an illness of several months. He was born in Stockholm, Sweden, June 4, 1841. He came west with his wife and lived for a time in Illinois, removing to Emporia in 1858. He started a bakery; later ran a general merchandise store in both of which he was highly skilled and in 1873 he went into the nursery business just outside of Emporia. The Hallberg nursery made much money for its owner and he became one of the wealthy men of the town. He had been a director of the Emporia National Bank since 1887, and was its oldest official. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow and a Mystic Shriner. He leaves a wife and one son, Chas. G. Hallberg, a florist in Emporia.

Mrs. Byron H. Ives.

After suffering nearly four years from a complication of diseases, Mrs. Julia Ives, 52 years old, wife of Byron Henry Ives, a well known florist of Albuquerque, N. M., died April 11, at the family home, Fourth street and Santa Fe avenue. It had been known for some weeks that Mrs. Ives could not live long, but the news of her death came, nevertheless, as a severe shock to her numerous friends in Albuquerque, where she was a pioneer resident, having come to that city with Mr. Ives, a bride from New York, more than twenty years ago. Mrs. Ives was stricken with typhoid fever some four years ago and this disease was followed by an attack of diabetes, which brought on the complications that culminated in her death.

She was a lover of art and of flowers, and to her belonged much of the credit for the planning of the Ives flower establishment, one of the most prosperous in the southwest. She was a devout member of the Lead Avenue Methodist church. Besides her church and charity work, she took a prominent part in the work of the Woman's Club, and was one of those most active in causing the club building to be built.

John Smith.

Cleveland, O., has lost one of its pioneer florists in the death of John Smith, whose demise occurred Sunday April 21. He was well known among the craft throughout the country, having been in business in Cleveland over fifty years. He retired from active connection with the trade in 1901. He was an old soldier, having served through the Civil war in the Fourth Ohio cavalry. His wife and four children survive him. One of his sons, Geo. W. Smith, is manager of the Cleveland Florists' Exchange. Interment was at Lakeview cemetery. F. A. F.

James Borden.

James Borden, who was in business as a florist in Boston for a number of years, but had lately been living with his sister, Mrs. Cassie B. Gilmore, at 209 College avenue, Somerville, Mass., died of pernicious anemia at the Massachusetts General Hospital, April 11. He had been an invalid over a year. He was born at Avonport, N. S., sixty three years ago. For the last thirty years he had lived in Boston and Brookline with Mrs. Gilmore; his wife died several years ago. He was a member of Boston Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Red Cross Lodge, K. of P., of East Boston. He leaves another sister, Mrs. Fred Goodman, in Wolfville, N. S.

M. Rice.

The news of the death of M. Rice, which occurred at his home in Oak Lane, near Philadelphia, at 12:30 a. m. Tuesday, April 23, will bring a feeling of personal bereavement to many florists all over the land. The shock of Mr. Rice's death comes with almost as much suddenness to his business associates as it will to his friends. Those who were in close touch with him during his five months' illness felt until within a few days that his tremendous will power would triumph. Scarcely a week ago it was believed to be but a question of a short time before Mr. Rice would be back at his work. Then came a change for the worse from which he never rallied.

Possessed of a genial personality, a high sense of integrity, and sound business judgment, Mr. Rice won and held the respect and admiration of all with whom he came in personal or business contact. A tireless worker, careful and systematic in all that he undertook, his success in business will be an inspiration to many young men. Starting as a poor boy with his own way to make, twenty-six years of faithful work saw him at the head of a house known and respected all over this country and in Europe, no small achievement for what may be fairly termed a pioneer enterprise.

M. Rice was born in Detroit August 14, 1864. He moved to Philadelphia in 1875, when 11 years of age. After a year or two at school he worked for eight years, spending most of his leisure time at the flower shop of his friend, Eugene Weiss, where he learned the needs of florists. In 1885, with Mr. Weiss and one of his employees, Mr. Rice formed a partnership under the name of the Philadelphia Immortelle Design Co. Mr. Weiss's knowledge of flower designing and his employee's cheerful handiwork furnished the made-up designs, while Mr. Rice had to sell them. This was uphill work at first, but after a week's effort Mr. Rice found a man in a town up the state who wanted the goods. From that time Mr. Rice believed thoroughly in the need for florists' supplies, a need that he has helped to direct and develop with wonderful rapidity for over a quarter of a century. The rapid growth of Mr. Rice's business will be remembered by all who read of his silver anniversary just before Thanksgiving, 1910. Suffice it to say here that his father and faithful friend, Bernard Schner, joined him in 1899 and that in 1905 they removed to their new building at 1220 Race street, a move which has advanced the name of M. Rice & Co. to the highest point of business fame. Mr. Rice is survived by a widow, who was Miss Annie Wolff, of this city, sister of Julius Wolff, Jr. Mr. Rice was a member of the Masonic orders and of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia.

Funeral services will be held from Mr. Rice's late residence in Oak Lane at 2 p. m. Thursday, April 25. Phil.

William Thomson.

The death of William Thomson, head of William Thomson & Co., seedsmen, Edinburgh, Scotland, occurred March 25. Mr. Thomson was 76 years of age and had built up an international business.

David Cooper.

David Cooper, retail florist at 615 Dundas street, Toronto, was found dead April 18 at the entrance to High park, as the result of a stroke of apoplexy. Before going into business for himself Mr. Cooper was employed by John H. Dunlop.

William G. Grant.

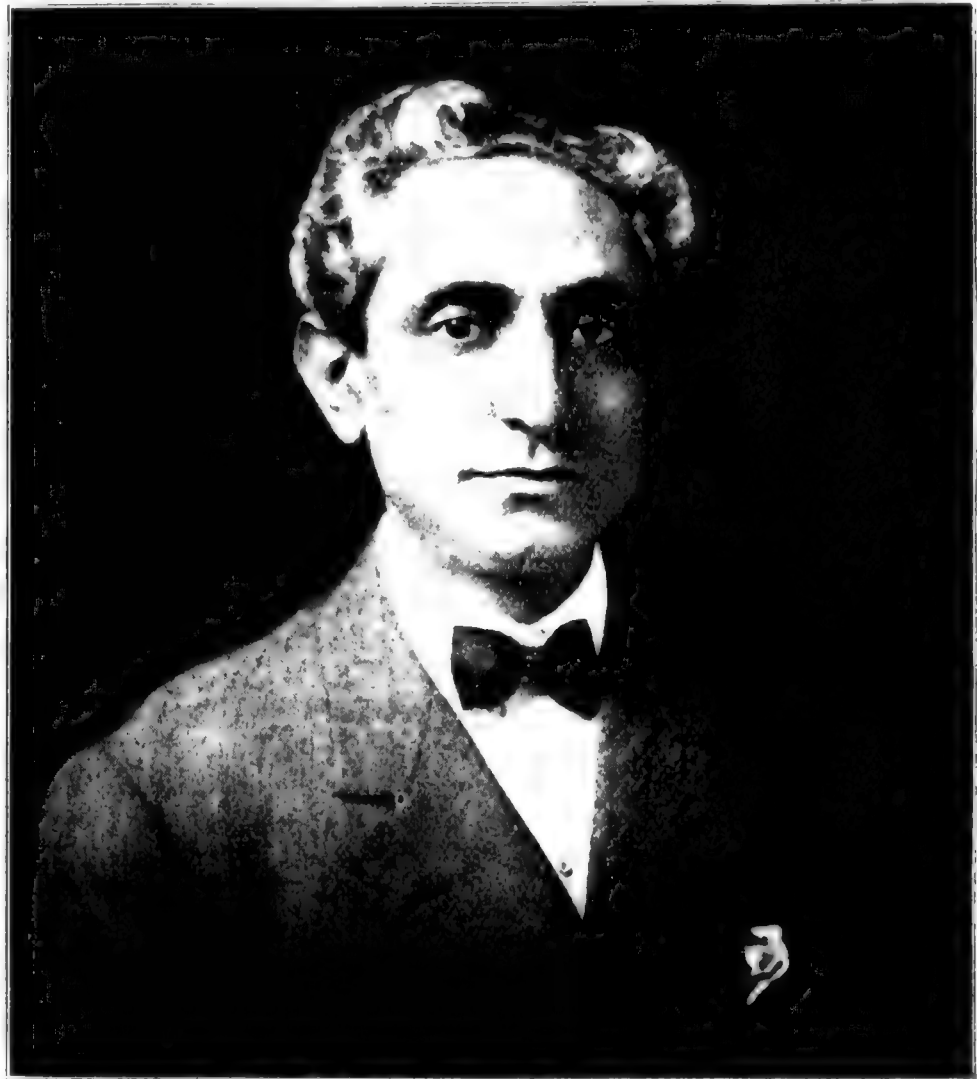

William G. Grant, a well known landscape gardener and florist, died April 14 at his home, 292 Gaskill street, Woonsocket, R. I., in his forty first year, after a long illness of cancer. Mr. Grant underwent two operations, one at his home and one at the Woonsocket hospital nine months ago, in hopes of prolonging his life. His condition was serious and everything that medical science could do was attempted, but the disease gradually weakened his constitution.

Mr. Grant was an esteemed resident of Woonsocket for about twenty-one years. He was employed by John W. Ellis up to five years ago, when he went into the landscape and gardening business for himself. He was born at Little River, Nova Scotia, the son of John F. and Ellen Grant, both of whom survive him. He was married twelve years ago to Bertha M. Isenor, who survives him. At the funeral, April 17, the nurserymen, gardeners and florists of the vicinity united in sending a handsome tribute of respect in the form of a large floral pillow.

M. Rice.

S. Meikle, president of the Newport Horticultural Society of Newport, R. I., died at her home on Meikle avenue, in that city, April 11, aged 76 years, never having rallied from the effects of an operation performed a few days previously. She was a native of Scotland and with her husband celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of her wedding about five years ago. Her husband, four sons and three daughters survive her. At the funeral, the floral tributes were numerous and beautiful and the pall bearers were all members of the Horticultural Society, namely, Robert Patterson, John T. Allen, Hugh Williamson, William MacKay, John A. Forbes and Robert A. Smith.

TWO FORMS OF TRADESCANTIA

I am sending you two samples of a plant commonly called the wandering Jew. I should like to know the exact name of each variety. If you can give the information I shall much appreciate it.

H. D.

Both are forms of Tradescantia Virginica. The darker variegated sort is called both T. Virginica Zebrina and multicolor, and the light variety is T. Virginica argentea variegata.

Ludington, Mich. Wm. Gregory & Son are adding four houses, each 21x132, to their present range of five houses, each 21x142. The latter are also being extended twenty-five feet, leaving a corner at the end of the new houses for a large boiler shed and service building. Moving is supplying the material and work will be started immediately.

COMPETENT greenhouse help is hard to find now that the growers all are getting busy with planting operations.

THESE are the days when any sort of a gardener can get a job without having to take a civil service examination.

If collections are slow, get after them.
 Money always is scarce with some florists, not because business is bad, but because credit and collection systems are poor.

NOT a few subscribers save themselves
 the bother of annual renewal by sending
 The Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-
 two visits of the paper.

POSSIBLY the most serious problem before the growers today is where to get an adequate supply of suitable fertilizer.
 The good old standby of other days in many places is now practically non-comeatable.

LAST season the florists of Cleveland collected a sum of money among themselves for the cooperative advertising of Mothers' day. So successful were they that this season $300 has been raised in the same manner for expenditure in the few days preceding May 12.
 An account of what is being done will be found in the Cleveland news letter, on page 108 of this issue.

BUSINESS EMBARRASMENTS.

Calla, O.—C. Edwin Oyster, trustee in bankruptcy for the Templin Co., paid March 27 the third and final dividend.
 It was three per cent, making a total of seventeen per cent realized by creditors.

New York, N. Y.—Schedules in bankruptcy filed by Nicola Siragusa, florist at 316 East Twelfth street, show liabilities of $10,462 and assets of $8,827, consisting of $8,627 in book accounts and $200 in furniture.

Toronto, Ont.—George Fretwell, 616 College street, who also has a store in Roncesvalles avenue, has made an assignment to Osler Wade.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Proceedings brought by United States Attorney John Lord O'Brian for the condemnation of a consignment of catsup sent to this city by the R. V. Crine Seed Co., a New Jersey corporation, have been halted by the fact that the company has gone into the hands of a receiver. The catsup was seized in Buffalo about two weeks ago at the instigation of the local officials of the pure food and drug inspection branch of the Department of Agriculture. The condemnation proceedings were to have been heard before Judge Hazel in United States district court April 17. The legal representative of the R. V. Crine Seed Co. reported that the corporation had gone into the hands of a receiver since the catsup was seized. The receiver requested an adjournment of the proceedings in order to give him time to familiarize himself with the situation.

 The prosecution was willing to allow a delay and then Judge Hazel granted an adjournment for fifteen days.

FREIGHT ON THE TITANIC.

The trade was not a heavy loser, in the matter of merchandise, by the sinking of the Titanic. The manifest showed that the following horticultural consignments were on board:

Maltus & Ware, 8 cases orchids.
 Thorburn, J. M., & Co., 3 cases bulbs.
 American Express Co., 1 case plants.
 Maltus & Ware, 11 cases orchids.
 Hempstead & Sons, 30 cases plants.
 Wells Fargo & Co., 1 case plants.
 Downing, R. F., & Co., 1 case bulbs.

The Great Central Market.

Responding to cool weather and clouded skies, the market for the latter part of last week was in striking contrast to the fore part, when an over-supply of almost every seasonable flower was noted. With the opening of business on Friday, however, following several cool days of rain, the market showed signs of strength and before closing time conditions began to look normal. A number of special sales by out-of-town retailers helped clear away the surplus on Friday and left the local houses with little else than the hold-over stock of the previous days. But little of this stock, however, was marketable and it was of little use on Saturday, only the lowest of prices being able to move it. Saturday found the market settled again, with a general stiffening in prices and the supply not much more than meeting the demand.
 In the meantime the weather conditions took on a change and Friday, Saturday and Sunday were reasonably good days for the retailers. The cool weather of the earlier part affected the supply to an unusual extent, considering the large quantities that were being shipped in as late as Thursday, and gave considerable relief to the market for roses, carnations and sweet peas, while spring flowers became generally popular and even the southern shipments of outdoor bulbous stock, which had suffered badly during the glut, found a fair sale.
 Prices began to steady on Friday afternoon, when the wholesalers first detected the change, and continued on Saturday and in some cases, such as the Butterfly or Spencer sweet peas, the upward tendency was not satisfied until Sunday. Beauties, Killarneys, White Killarneys and Richmonds, which had suffered from the oversupply earlier, began to stiffen in prices consistently with the demand and, in fact, almost everything that had been abundant shortened up when the cool weather got in its work. The demand for Beauties was not unusual, but it managed to take care of the supply, while Killarneys had a brisk run, with carnations. The latter had also been in great supply, but the out-of-town special sales gathered up a greater part of the surplus and on Saturday they were again bringing normal rates. The cold weather seemed to affect the carnation supply fully as much as the rose crop.

Among the novelties last week, the first consignment of lilac was seen and, although some was of fair quality, it was generally poor and failed to reach any high mark in prices for the first supply, notwithstanding that the initial shipment was three weeks later than last year. Spanish iris, tulips and jonquils found a fair market at the close of the week and in the majority of cases a clean-up was made at prices that looked fair by comparison with what had been offered earlier. Snapdragon, most of which was pink, failed to attract the buyers and it was not moved to any great advantage to the shippers. With violets, both double and single, practically off the market, the demand for sweet peas improved and was at its best on Saturday and Sunday, when the supply was hardly equal to the demand. The winter crop is about off and the stock now coming in has nowhere near the quality of the Butterfly. These are not in great supply and consequently command good prices. Orchids are not yet abundant and command a fairly good return in view of the spring wedding demand, which is helping the sale of these as well as valley. Valley is not scarce, for since the passing of Lent the supply has been on the increase in anticipation of the weddings. Lilies are in good supply. Callas are not abundant, but enough to go around have reached the market. Easter lilies are not in came life members, having paid $100 each. The charter was ordered framed and placed in the custody of the treasurer, John Zech. A committee on badge was appointed and the sports committee was instructed to plan a picnic and report. The secretary was instructed to write to the secretary of the S. A. F. to see if the convention program has an open evening on which the association may offer entertainment.

Various Notes.

The executive committee of the Horticultural Society of Chicago held a meeting April 22 to pass on the report of the premium committee for the 1913 spring show. Action was deferred to April 30 because of light attendance. Some of the committee wish to omit the show, as before Easter is too early and after Easter brings it in conflict with the National Flower Show.

A. L. Randall and Mrs. Randall returned from West Baden April 23.

Jack Byers, of the Chicago Carnation Co., the store staff, has been advised by the doctor to take the treatment at Hot Springs, Ark. He hopes to get away April 27.

Peter Reinberg began replanting roses right after Easter and now has several houses of Beauties, Killarneys and Richmonds started for a summer crop.

Wieter Bros. are watching the E. C. Amling is busy building. Not only is the new bank, of which he is president, putting up an office structure, but Mr. Amling himself is planning a new residence in Oak Park.

The Batavia Greenhouse Co. reports that peonies are above the ground at Batavia and that continuous warm weather will yet bring them in for Memorial day.

Kennicott Bros. Co. had a telegram April 23 from Spaulding & Son, the big growers of outdoor flowers at Villa Ridge: "Peony crop very light this year. Inform Review."

Kyle & Foerster say they look for a big May, starting with Mothers' day and ending with Memorial day, the only month in the year with two real flower days.

John Kruchten says the Deerfield Nurseries are getting a good spring crop of gardenias, but that the demand for them is not so strong as it was earlier in the season.

Louis Wittbold was again confined to the house for a few days last week by his severe cold, but is around again.

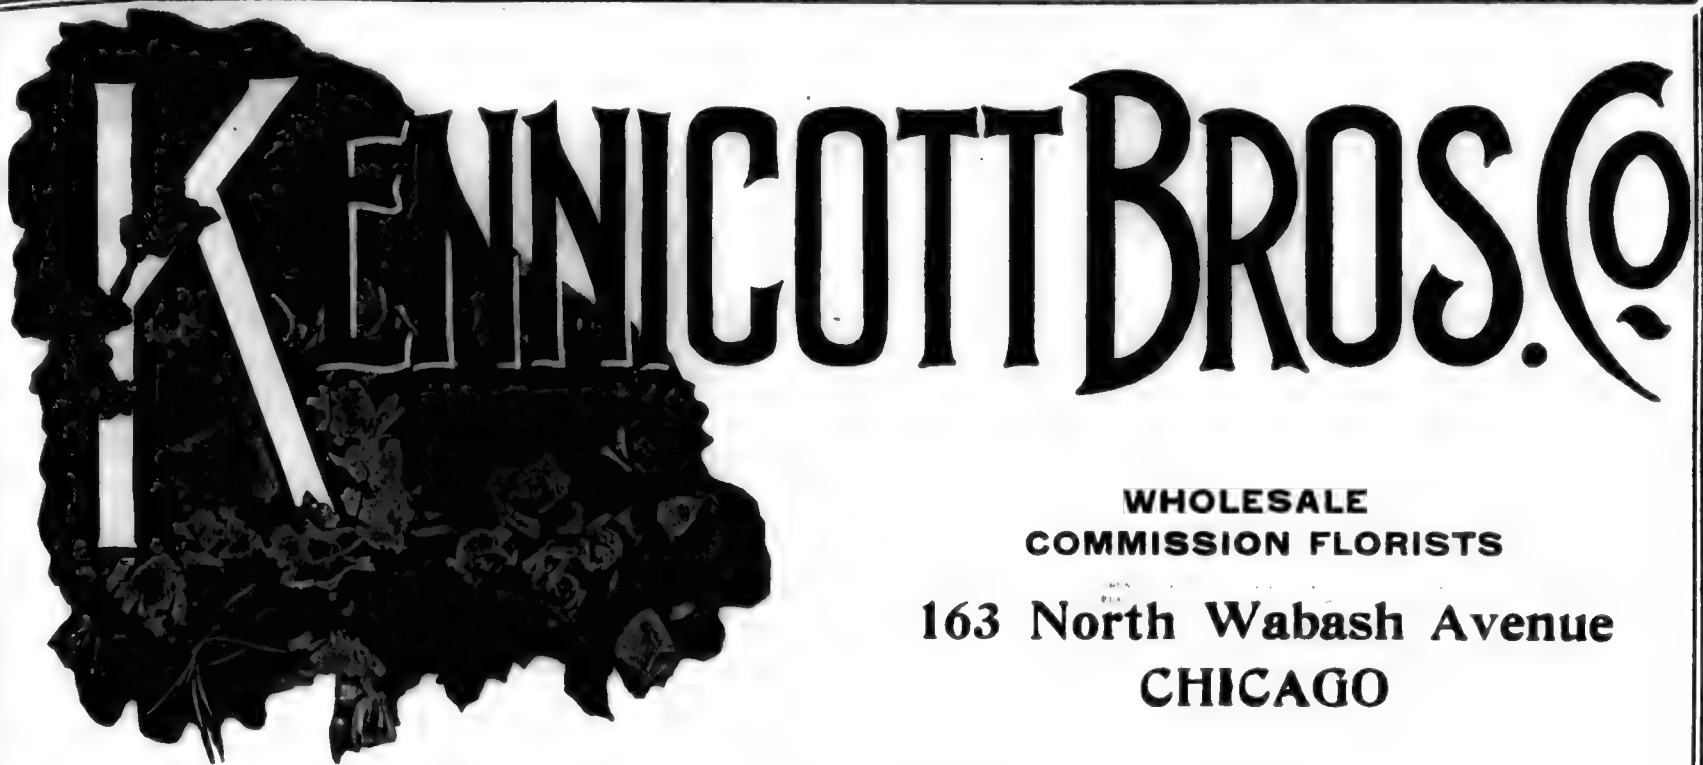

Clubbing together to buy supplies and get carload rates seems to be a good way to save money. Mr. Mohring, manager of the Edgewater branch of the Edw. Hines Lumber Co., reports the sale of a carload of pecky cypress to two New Jersey growers who combined their orders to get the carload price.

D. D. Johnson, manager of the United Fertilizer Co., has spent a profitable week in St. Louis and vicinity and reports that C. A. Kuehn, of St. Louis, is to handle the Evergreen Brand fertilizer.

The Illinois self-watering flower boxes are now being placed on the market by the Illinois Flower Box Co., with offices at 180 North Dearborn street. It is said that Mr. Woolley, secretary of the American Metal Box Co., which formerly manufactured this line but is now in the receiver's hands, is the sole owner of the patents and is the controlling factor of the new company.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO THE TRADE:-

Owing to the backwardness of the outdoor growing season, as the largest growers of Peonies in the world we are forced to delay our advertising one week, or until such time as our growers can assure us of a Decoration Day crop.

It is safe to say, with the hundreds of thousands of plants we own or control, that we will have at least a fair cut for Decoration Day. Watch our ads from next issue on. We will do our best to give you the right information on this important crop. Above all, don't forget that the Peony is the Decoration Day flower.

As old line commission men, we will also have all other flowers in season, and as we figure ourselves the Firm of Firms at this holiday, you can feel safe in placing any size orders with us for Roses, Carnations, Ferns, Galax, Boxwood and PEONIES.

Very respectfully yours,

KENNICOTT BROS. CO.

We have purchased 10 acres of Peony plants from the Chicago Carnation Co. and must dig this stock next fall. As this buy was made just to obtain the Richardson's Rubra Superba, you can buy all the other varieties at your own price. Everyone knows the Chicago Carnation Co. had the finest varieties money could buy—and now we are going to let you name the price. All must be sold, regardless of value.

A large attendance is expected at the meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club May 2, the attraction being an address on the uses of concrete in greenhouse construction by S. A. Jamieson, of the Universal Portland Cement Co., illustrated by stereopticon slides.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, held April 18, a resolution was adopted approving the selection of President John F. Kidwell as manager. The resolution also requested the board of directors to act formally on a permanent manager and named Mr. Kidwell as the choice of the stockholders. The board of directors will meet April 24 to take action in a formal manner to carry out the wishes of the stockholders.

Robert Northam, store manager for George Reinberg, reports that Sunday, April 21, was the best Sunday this year in the way of sales. It helped to make up for the fore part of the week.

Phil Schupp, of J. A. Budlong's, finds My Maryland doing excellently this season, even surpassing the Killarneys. Mr. Schupp asserts that Maryland will eventually be widely grown as a late spring and summer rose.

A. L. Vaughan returned April 23 from French Lick, where he spent a week away from business cares.

Bassett & Washburn report that O. P. Bassett is doing California via automobile and last week made a record run of 658 miles in two and one-half days. On the return trip the engine took fire and as a result Mr. Bassett and his party passed the night in the mountains.

The Market.

The market was not so crowded last week as it was the previous week, but there was enough stock coming in to fill all orders. Roses are plentiful and have been ever since Easter. First quality only sells well. Beauties are off color and more of these could be sold if the quality were better. Killarneys in all varieties seem to have the call in this market, but Richmond sells well. Carnations also have been more than the trade could consume and all varieties have been of excellent quality. There has been an abundance of sweet peas at all the markets. Lilies of all kinds have been in oversupply, especially callas. All seasonable bulbous stock is plentiful.

April 22 the market was lightly supplied with everything except roses and the trade was buying quite heavily, at advanced prices on carnations, peas and lilies. The retail trade was reported good, as there were many weddings, receptions, dinners and funeral orders.

Various Notes.

The Ladies' Home Circle met at the home of Mrs. Fred C. Weber, Jr., last week.

The tickets for the florists' dance are selling at a lively rate. All the wholesale houses are handling the tickets for the committee. Frank Windler and Albert Gums, who have the arrangements in charge, say they have engaged the best music and that Westminster hall will be transformed into a garden of flowers and plants.

The Retail Florists' Association met April 15. As there was only a small attendance, it was decided to hold no meeting in May, owing to the busy planting season, and all business was laid over until the June meeting.

Our nurserymen say they will have an extremely short season for planting. They report many are discarding the California privet and that they have many orders for Berberis Thunbergii, a hedge that will stand the coldest winter and which needs little pruning.

Fred Foster, of the Paris Floral Co., reports the store was robbed April 19. The burglar got $18. in money and helped himself to carnations and roses.

J. F. Ammann was reelected a member of the board of education at a recent election at Edwardsville, Ill.

Carl Beyer was around visiting old friends last week, after his long illness. He has fully recovered and says he will be ready to bowl if we take a team to Chicago in August.

Alex. Geranios, head of the Metropolitan Floral Co., spent a few days in Chicago last week. In his absence Miss Bernard had charge.

Frank Fillmore reports that he is not growing any candidum lilies this year, as the price for them last year was not enough to pay him for his trouble. His philosophy is: "The best way to get a head is to raise lettuce."

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Gorly, of Grimm & Gorly, left last week for a fortnight's pleasure trip to Florida. Mr. Gorly says he needed a vacation after the big Easter rush.

All the big plant stands at Union market are now full of business. Thomas Carr, Miss Wilkerson and the Redbud Floral Co. say that trade in plants, bulbs and seeds has been brisk all the week.

Dr. George T. Moore, the new director of the Missouri Botanical Garden, will take charge May 1, succeeding Dr. William Trelease, who resigned a few months ago.

CINCINNATI.

The Gateway to the South.

All last week the receipts continued to be larger than the demand. Some of the stock was beginning to show the effects of the continued warm, bright weather. At the end of the week a competition among some of the storemen along Vine street, in which it was attempted to see which could sell carnations the cheapest, cleaned up the market of practically all the accumulated stock. One concern started by advertising the blooms at 15 cents per dozen, when others immediately put up signs offering them at 10 cents per dozen. This did some good, as on opening Monday morning nothing but fresh stock was apparent in any of the wholesale houses and the whole market had a better and more substantial tone than at any time during the last fortnight. Shipping business also seemed to pick up at the same time. The prices realized, however, were the same as the previous week.

Various Notes.

The wedding of Laurence Fritz and Miss Norma Carius took place April 20.

Ed Buschle acted as best man and the latter's fiancée, Miss Shildrink, served as bridesmaid. Mr. and Mrs. Fritz will reside in Newport.

C. J. Jones, of the Walnut Hills Floral Bazaar, is now a grandpa. A daughter was born to his daughter-in-law, Mrs. C. B. Jones, last week.

William Murphy says that, judging by the number of hanging baskets he is selling, the plant growers will quickly be sold out of stock this year.

E. G. Gillett has been getting a fine line of lilacs from the south.

C. E. Critchell has been getting his bronze galax ready for quick shipment, in anticipation of a heavy call for it.

William Salmon has been throwing out his chest since last week, when a baby daughter arrived at his home.

L. H. Kyrk has been offering some elegant field-grown poeticus from George Klotter, the West Price Hill florist. Mr. Klotter is also picking a nice lot of pansies.

The Cincinnati Cut Flower Exchange has booked a number of good orders for valley for the ensuing week.

Peter Weiland's iris, gladioli and snapdragon are being cleaned up each day as fast as they arrive.

Albert McCullough has been sending choice bulbous stock from his own conservatories to the J. M. McCullough's Sons Co.

The Market.

The last week was the least encouraging of the year in the cut flower market. The gloom that hangs over the city because of the Titanic disaster seems to pervade every line of trade, and the effect of the tragedy was particularly felt in every industry where luxuries are supplied. And so the flower market was one of the first to suffer. There seemed to be little heart for anything. Hundreds of dinners and functions of a social nature were canceled and business for days was practically at a standstill. It will be some time before normal conditions are resumed.

There can be little, therefore, to add to the quotations of a week ago, except to note a general reduction even from the low prices of that date. American Beauties held up better than any of the roses, all other varieties, even the novelties, sharing in the general reduction. The shorter supply accounts for this. Of Killarney there seems to be no end. Some wholesalers receive from forty to seventy-five boxes of these a day. The street and the department stores are the only outlets for this surplus and the transient public is reaping the benefit. The street men are offering fresh long-stemmed roses at 10 cents a bunch on every corner. The people are surely being educated. Perhaps the retailers may reap the benefit of this later on.

Carnations have fallen with roses. Grand stock sold at $1 a hundred April 20. Gigas, Mendellii and Mossiæ cattleyas have held fairly well, but Schroederæ has found the street merchants, as was feared, and the department stores actually advertise them as low as 15 cents. Gardenias are badly neglected, the stores only using a few of the finest. For the common and short stock the street is the only outlet. Valley is down and lilies of all kinds are at the lowest ebb. Of violets, spring flowers and bulbous stock the less said the better.

Various Notes.

The New York party of over twenty to visit the London exhibition in May was booked on the Titanic. The loss of the great ship may change the plans of many and lessen the number who will sail.

The auction houses are both crowded every Tuesday and Friday.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

Since Easter, business with most of the local florists, especially the retailers, has been satisfactory, weddings and receptions calling for a considerable amount of choice cut flowers and plant decorations. The stock of pot plants, especially bedding plants, is moving constantly, but on account of the rainy weather we have had in the last two weeks the work of the landscape gardeners is handicapped. The most prominent outdoor grown cut flowers are Spanish iris, which can be seen here by the thousand, and the demand for them is brisk. Most of the outdoor roses are only fit for cheap work and the sweet peas are far behind in quantity as well as quality. Greenhouse lilies can be seen everywhere, and thousands of outdoor ones will soon be in bloom.

The truckers in the vicinity of New Orleans are bringing in some fine vegetables. Lettuce, shallots, turnips, mustard and bunch onions are scarce; radishes and spinach are in moderate supply, but beets, carrots and parsley are plentiful. The coming string bean crop

Club Meeting.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society held its monthly meeting April 18, at Kolb's German Tavern. Claude Ory presided; C. R. Panter, the secretary, was at his desk and there was a fair attendance. Picturesque Grand Isle, situated in the Gulf of Mexico, was unanimously selected for this year's outing during the middle of July. It was decided to make the trip by boat, to give all the participants the full benefit of the highly interesting country. C. R. Panter, B. M. Wichers and Paul Abele were appointed a committee of arrangement, with instructions to report at the next meeting.

To draft resolutions in memory of Mrs. Charles Eble and H. A. Despomier the following committee was ap-

J. A. Newsham exhibited a gorgeous collection of orchids, and Richard Eichling, foreman for U. J. Virgin, showed a fine collection of Spanish iris. A vote of thanks was extended to both exhibitors for their excellent display.

Henry Cook, successor to M. Cook's original establishment, recently made some highly successful experiments in growing cucumbers under glass. The vines are strong and have been bearing since the middle of January, the fruits averaging a length of from fourteen to eighteen inches, and from six to seven and one-half inches in circumference. They are of a light green color, and thin seeded. He intends to PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The market opened badly April 18, but showed improvement on several of the days following. Conditions are not pleasant to describe. There has been no special increase in the supply of flowers, but there are a great many more flowers than the ordinary buyers require and special customers have to be found to obtain an outlet for the surplus. The dark weather that prevailed for several days affected sweet peas, shortening the supply of salable stock, and to a lesser degree it affected other flowers. A feature of the market was the scarcity of Beauties April 19 and 20, a scarcity totally unexpected by those best able to judge. The price went up to $4 a dozen on some selected stock, while all grades averaged higher prices. Richmond, too, sold well and the general tone of the market reflected the improvement in these roses, an improvement maintained April 22 on some varieties. We are in the season when Saturdays and Mondays are apt to be the best days. The market can be best understood by adding that the quantity of any one flower in the best grade usually exceeds the demand, so that prices will not average according to quality. Violets are almost over. Oddly, the demand for gardenias seems better. Cattleya Mossiae is in excellent form and in fair demand. Lilies are generally hard to sell, excepting the best. Both indoor and outdoor lilies are abundant. There are still some good Emperors, but the bulk of the bulbous stock is outdoor grown. Roses and carnations require no special comment. Greens continue in fair demand, particularly asparagus sprays.

D. Feurstenberg has sold the Floral Exchange at Edgely, Pa., to a new company that will conduct the business under the name of the Floral Nurseries. Albert Arnold will be the managing director. It is understood that the present manager, Harry Simpson, will be retained and that roses will be grown, for the present at least. This sale will come as a surprise to the trade, which have always associated the Floral Exchange with Mr. Feurstenberg. It is understood that Mr. Feurstenberg desired to devote his entire time to the management of his second enterprise, the Florex Gardens, North Wales.

The Market.

Business was fair last week. We had several cold, sunless days, which reduced the output of flowers. The present week sees heavier arrivals and only moderate trade. We have not yet had a really warm wave to paralyze business and, thanks to the cool weather, the quality of all flowers is holding up remarkably well. Roses are not quite so abundant as they were, but there are more than the demand calls for and prices are lower. Certain varieties, such as Radiance, Mrs. Taft, Beauty and Hillingdon, are selling well. The novelties are always in demand. Carnations are rather more plentiful, with prices ruling lower. Quality is still good. Pink Delight continues a prime favorite. Violets, outside of doubles, are done for the season and these latter are getting small. Sweet peas are more plentiful, with some fine Spencer varieties now coming in.

Tulips and narcissi are still in good supply, but a few days will see an end of those grown indoors. The outdoor crop is not yet ready, owing to the late season. Antirrhinums and marguerites are both much more abundant, but sell well. Ten weeks' stocks and candytuft sell slowly. Spanish iris is good and popular. Some of the gladioli, such as Peach Blossom and Blushing Bride, are now coming in, also a few of the large-flowered types. There is no great call for orchids or gardenias. Valley is abundant and good, but sells slowly. For lilies and callas the call is sluggish. Asparagus and adiantum are not in heavy demand at present.

Various Notes.

We are pleased to report Thomas Pegler as steadily improving. He has been at the salesrooms of the Flower Growers' Sales Co. several times in the

The appalling disaster to the S. S. Titanic has been the almost universal topic with everyone of late. So far as learned, no one in the trade was on the ill fated ship, but several lost friends on her. Quite a party of growers were planning to go to England on her May 11, to see the international horticultural show in London.

J. W. Simpson and D. Horrigan are shipping superb yellow marguerites to the Boston Coöperative Market.

W. H. Wyman, of the Bay State and Framingham nurseries, says he is fairly swamped with business. Digging began late and the season will be a brief one.

GIGANTEUMS DID NOT OPEN.

If possible, please tell me what is the matter with the inclosed sample of my lilies. I had seventeen lilies out of one case of giganteums, 7x9. This is the first time that I have had any trouble with giganteums.

If your lilies were from cold storage, it is possible the bulbs were subjected to too low a temperature, which would account for some of the plants making clean growth, but having all their buds brown. Feeding too heavily is also liable to cause a similar trouble; so, also, is a sharp drop in temperature while the buds are still small. Sharp drops in temperature cause this trouble frequently; when the buds are almost ready to open, if they are taken di-

...NEWS NOTES...

Westboro, Mass.—Wm. M. Gardner has resigned his position at the Lyman school and will hereafter devote his time entirely to his greenhouses on High street.

Delmar, N. Y.—Edwin Van Allen has gone to Anaconda, Mont., to accept a position as vegetable grower with a large corporation operating greenhouses there.

Paducah, Ky.—Robert E. Rudolph has opened a downtown store at 408 Broadway. Practically all of his flowers are grown in his own greenhouses at Rowlandtown.

Lenox, Mass.—Philip Gustavson has left his position as greenhouse foreman at Ethelwynd and is visiting his brother at Becket. He is succeeded at Ethelwynd by John Mair, formerly florist on Brooklawn Farm, at Morristown.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—Messrs. Milham, Lane, Crowley and Grant, of the park and boulevard commission, recently inspected the city's greenhouse at Riverside cemetery, and decided, it is said, to try to secure an appropriation for the erection of a new greenhouse.

Oil City, Pa.—W. M. Deyoe & Co., the Sixth street florists, have opened a store at 6 Seneca street. The store is handsomely and completely equipped and is in charge of a force of five clerks, with five men and boys in the delivery department. And this, says the firm, "is only the beginning."

Baltimore, Md.—The preliminary schedule of premiums has been issued for the exhibition in connection with the annual meeting of the Maryland State Horticultural Society, November 18 to 23. Classes 86 to 144 are for florists' products. Copies of the list may be had by addressing T. B. Symonds, secretary, College Park, Md.

Goshen, N. Y.—Edwin Schuster, a florist and gardener, who was formerly employed here for a time by Henry Bacon, a lawyer, is reported to have fallen unconscious recently in East Twenty-sixth street, New York city, while hunting for work. He is rather advanced in years and was also exhausted, apparently, by lack of food. He was taken to Bellevue hospital, where the doctors stated that he had even chances for recovery.

Webster City, Ia.—The Curtis Floral Co., whose establishments at Hampton and Mason City are already well known in the trade, has opened a store in this place. As reported in The Review at the time, the firm recently purchased land at the head of Prospect street and began preparations for engaging in business here. Work in the erection of two greenhouses, 150 feet long, will be begun about June 1, with the intention of completing them in sixty days.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

Providence is enjoying one of the best seasons ever experienced following Easter, and from all sides come satisfactory reports of good business, notwithstanding there are few large social functions of any kind. Funeral work remains about normal, but the custom of buying cut flowers for the house is steadily growing. Violets have disappeared, but marguerites and stocks are now in abundance. Prices range about as usual for this season.

Various Notes.

Charles Hunt recently placed orders for 10,000 bulbs.

George Johnson & Sons, of the Elmwood Nursery, have been awarded the contract of caring for the grounds of the State Armory in this city.

Peter S. Byrnes, of Wickford, has just registered a new twenty-eight horse-power Federal auto truck.

Thomas Curley is experiencing two weeks' jury duty. He reports an abundance of outdoor work.

Eugene Appleton reports the outlook for a big season on landscape work the best ever. He has an unusually large force of men already at work.

George Johnson & Sons have secured several large contracts recently for ornamental planting in East Providence, and Robert O. Jordan, in charge of the nursery, is busily engaged in lining out, planting and filling orders. Edward M. Pope, in charge of the greenhouses, reports brisk business, and so does D. B. Meader, of the forestry department. George Johnson, the founder of the firm, now in his eighty-fourth year, is still active, although just recovering from a slight illness. The firm has a force of more than forty men, three motorcycles, six horses and additional teams on hire for the spring work.

A regular meeting of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society was held April 17, with a large attendance, the subject for the meeting being apples.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the wholesale flower market was held April 17 for a discussion as to the future of the corporation. O. H. Williams resigned as treasurer and John Jansen was elected to fill the vacancy. O. H. Williams, Joseph Kopelman and Albert Holscher surrendered their stalls.

row and sympathy. Major Archibald Butt, aide to the President, and Clarence Moore, the well-known horseman, both general favorites, were members of the social set that had many entertainments scheduled for this week, among them the Chevy Chase Hunt Club ball, which is always one of the most brilliant affairs of this season of the year, and has since been indefinitely postponed. Orders had already been placed for the supply of a large quantity of cut flowers and potted plants for the occasion. The society circus, of which both these gentlemen, together with all of Washington's notables, are patrons, is also called off. In addition to these, many dinners, teas and dances to be given by individuals will not be held.

Rain and cold weather during the last week has also materially shortened the demand for flowers, although the sale of potted plants has been exceptionally good and funeral work has been plentiful. Plenty of stock was to be had in all grades up to Sunday last, when it became fairly hard to get a sufficient amount of flowers to fill orders; this due to the dull days. There had been a glut of carnations during the preceding days, the best stock going at $1.50, while the intermediate grades were turned over to the street men at less than half that price, but on Sunday

they jumped to as high as $4 for A-1 quality. Good violets are a thing of the past and jonquils are of such a grade as to make it useless to send them in; Easter lilies, of which there is a large amount, can be had for any old price at all and at that there is little or no demand. Greens are a bit more plentiful and are moving proportionately.
Orchids are somewhat scarce and are bringing $6 per dozen. Sweet peas are poor in quality, but snapdragon is good. Some good American Beauty roses, with exceptionally long stems and fine foliage, are coming in.

Various Notes.

William Rehder, grower and retailer, of Wilmington, N. C., registered at the Pennock-Meehan store last week, and R. W. Ratcliff, of Richmond, Va., was also in town.

F. H. Kramer, accompanied by R. W.
Ratcliff, went to New York last week to witness the arrival of the Carpathia, bearing the survivors of the Titanic.
Mr. Kramer describes the scene as being a heart-breaking one and an incident never to be forgotten.

James Reynolds, lately with the Washington Florist Co., has given up his position with that firm and has gone to Harrison, N. J.

Miss Margaret Boyle, who conducts a stand at the Center market, is reported as being confined to her home by illness.

M. J. McCabe, of the Center market, furnished the large wreath which was placed upon the grave of Washington by the Capital Society, Children of the American Revolution. The wreath was a 1-foot one, made of galax leaves, Easter lilies and Killarney roses.

Hoover, is reported as improving in health following his accident of two weeks ago. While crossing Fourteenth street, after having made a hurried delivery of flowers at the Burlington apartment house, Mr. Mayberry was struck by an automobile operated by Miss Annette Goldsmith and knocked down. He received bad cuts and bruises around the head and shoulders and while unconscious was taken to the hospital, being later removed to his home. At first it was thought that he had suffered internal injuries and all visitors were denied him. Mr. Mayberry is an ex-president of the Florists' Club, and well known throughout this section.

Frank G. Pierson, architect, is preparing plans for the new building soon to be erected for the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., on H street, northwest, between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets. The structure is to be two stories in height, of fireproof material throughout, and will contain a refrigerating plant.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club is scheduled for Tuesday, May 7, when the matters that have arisen since the March meeting will be brought up.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Thirtieth annual convention, Chicago, June 25 to 27, 1912.

THE Alfred J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., handles nursery stock as a side line and has had a good volume of orders for ornamentals.

J. M. THORBURN & Co., New York, lost three cases of bulbs that went down with the Titanic. They are the only seedsmen whose name appeared on the manifest of the ill-fated boat.

THE R. V. Crine Seed Co., a New Jersey corporation, has gone into a receivership following the condemnation and seizure of two shipments of catsup by United States food inspectors.

RALPH M. WARD, New York, has sailed for Europe, to visit the various connections of his firm and attend the London flower show in May. In June, Mr. Ward will sail from England for China and Japan, returning to New York in the autumn.

THE Hogue-Kellogg Co., Ventura, Cal., which has been growing seed beans for a number of large wholesale seed houses for several years, in conjunction with a commission business, will hereafter make a specialty of the seed bean business. It is reported their seed bean business last season ran to eighty-five carloads.

J. C. ROBINSON, of the Robinson Seed Co., Waterloo, Neb., who recently purchased the business of the Rocky Ford Seed Growers' Association, has purchased the warehouse formerly occupied by the Union Trading Co., in Rocky Ford. A number of changes will be made in the building, to fit the requirements of the seed business.

CONDITIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Writing from San Jose, Cal., under date of April 17, J. W. Edmundson, sales manager for the Braslan Seed Growers' Co., says:

"Conditions in seed growing sections of California are materially improved since the last rain, though some sections are backward in growth, owing to the drought of winter. In the Santa Clara valley we have had 9.04 inches of rain to date. The average here is 15.25 inches, so you will readily see we

To avoid late deliveries, I will send all early orders of Winter Sweet Pea Seed directly from our ranch in Lompoc, Cal. These will reach my farthest customers not later than August 10th, saving over four weeks' time. Send all letters of importance to Lompoc, Cal. We will have all the leading colors and many novelties. Orders booked now. New complete list will be sent out in May.

Mt. Airy, Md., Feb. 26, 1912.

Dear Sir:—We have been cutting very fine peas this season from your stock. Stems 18 and 20 inches, with 3, 4 and 5 flowers, and in several instances with 6 flowers to a stem. You deserve and receive great honor from the trade for bringing Winter flowering Sweet Peas to their present high position in the market. You have already done more for the florist than the great Burbank will ever do.

NEW YORK PURE SEED BILL.

Over the protests of the New York state correspondent of the American Seed Trade Association and other seedsmen of the state, Governor Dix affixed his signature, April 13, to the so-called Wilson pure seeds bill. It will become the law and go into effect July 1.

Marshall H. Duryea, who led the opposition to the bill, said: "My principal objection to the bill is the word 'weight,' for which the word 'weight' should be substituted, as the method provided in the bill has been found to be impractical. The Department of Agriculture at Washington make all their tests by weight, and furthermore, all state seed analysts throughout the country recommend that such tests should be made by weight and not by count.

"As many seedsmen in New York state have their seeds tested by the department at Washington, all such tests will be useless under the proposed law, and dealers doing an interstate business will be seriously handicapped, as they will be obliged to make two tests, one by weight and one by count, because the results made by each test vary materially."

ROBINSON'S PLANS.

It having been reported from Rocky Ford, Colo., that the J. C. Robinson Seed Co., which, as had previously been announced in this column, has bought out the Rocky Ford Seed Growers' Association, was removing from Nebraska to Colorado, The Review asked for a statement of plans. The following letter came over the signature of J. C. Robinson, president:

"Yours of April 20 in reference to our moving our business from Waterloo to Rocky Ford is received. In reply, beg to state that we are establishing a growing station at Rocky Ford. Have purchased a warehouse there, in the central part of the town, will install complete cleaning machinery, and our branch will be under the charge of J. A. Robinson, who, for fourteen years past, has been traveling for a prominent seed firm. Mr. Robinson will travel about three months in the year for our firm, and the balance of the time will be spent at Rocky Ford, in charge of the work there.

"It is our ambition to do work on our stocks at Rocky Ford that it has been impossible to do here at home in the last few years, since the aphid has troubled our crops so seriously. We hope to bring vine seed stocks back to the point where they were some six or eight years ago, as we believe that stocks today are not as good as they were at one time."

SWEET CORN FOR SEED.

The use of sweet corn, at least of the quality and in the quantities now common, is comparatively modern, says W. W. Tracy in a recent bulletin. Seedsmen handled very little sweet corn previous to 1825 or 1830, and for the next twenty or twenty-five years practically all of the seed used came from New England. In later years the growing of sweet-corn seed gradually extended into western New York, northern Ohio, Michigan, Iowa and Nebraska, until at present fully eighty per cent of the sweet-corn seed produced in the United States is grown at points west and north of Cleveland, Ohio. South of the latitude of that city sweet corn is so liable to injury from the bollworm that it can seldom be profitably grown for seed.

The corn plant is influenced as to size of stalk and earliness of maturity by climatic conditions, and this effect is transmitted through the seed, so it

"Dear John—Come home; your tailor is dead," wrote the faithful wife whose husband was of the flap-jack variety, hard pressed by the Knight of the Shears. The less a man owes, the better off he is, for his mind is more at rest, and he is more independent. He can laugh and sing. The man who can't laugh, can't think well, because when one laughs he relaxes muscles, nerves and brain cells, and thereby strengthens them for later use. Grattan said: "At twenty years of age, the will reigns; at thirty, the wit; and at forty, the judgment." That was some time ago. Today the leaders among men strike an average, and at thirty you can find men of will, wit and judgment in business, such as the world never had before. It's the young men today who will rule the world tomorrow. Watch them. Same in the florist business—the young men will make more progressive history in the next ten years than their fathers have in the past twenty-five. Especially the boys who are not mere potwallopers. Thinkers—Leaders—Persistent Business-Getters. The boys who get encore orders, at a profit, and who are growers as well—scientific growers—the kind who reason, and can grow good lilies. Any old greenhouse chambermaid can grow Paper Whites, but it takes some skill to produce good lilies. Horse-shoe Brand Lily bulbs of all varieties are cultivated to satisfy all kinds of growers, but in the hands of experts—scientific growers—the results from them are marvelous. Try them. is desirable that seed of sorts in which earliness is an important element of value should be grown as far north as it can be fully ripened and cured.

The qualities of sweetness and tenderness in green corn are also influenced by soil and climatic conditions, but there is a difference of opinion as to how far this influence is carried in the seed. The corn packers of Maine insist that green corn grown in the north from northern-grown seed is superior to that which can be produced from seed grown farther south. The Maryland packers insist that they can get not only more but sweeter and more tender corn from seed grown in their own locality. In both cases the superior results obtained from local-grown seed may be accounted for by the fact that seed grown in any locality for a number of generations has been found by experimentation to give better results in that locality than seed of the same stock equally well grown elsewhere.

The belief that the use of northern and eastern grown seed will result in better and sweeter green corn is so general that seedsmen's catalogues are often so worded as to give the impression that all the sweet corn they offer is grown in the east, but very often seed bought of an eastern seedsman and supposed to be eastern grown was actually produced in the west. There are many facts that seem to indicate that the gardener's prejudice against western seed is well founded.

If a field of sweet corn is planted with two lots of seed of the same variety, one eastern and the other western grown, and ears as uniform as possible as to maturity and quality are gathered from the two parts of the field, processed and canned in the same way, experts can with a fair degree of certainty decide which lot of seed the corn in different cans was grown from, and they will generally declare that the corn from the eastern-grown seed is the better.

This difference in quality is much more noticeable in the earlier than in the later maturing sorts and with some lots of seed than with others. The belief that it actually exists is so general that it affects the relative market value both of canned corn and of sweet-corn seed. If we carefully select ears grown from eastern and from western seed which are in exactly the same stage of maturity, chemical analysis fails to detect any constant difference in sugar content. There is, however, a slight but discernible difference in the size of chit, or germ, and in a general way the green corn from western seed is slightly coarser in texture and less tender than that from eastern seed. The difference in quality may be accounted for as follows:

The climatic conditions in the western corn-growing sections, especially during the season when corn is earing, are often such as to induce a marvelously rapid development—much more rapid than is often seen in the east. In the west it is sometimes difficult to find ears of sweet corn green enough to be in prime boiling condition in fields where it was equally difficult to find ears which were mature enough to be palatable forty-eight to seventy-two hours earlier. Seed grown under such conditions would often transmit the rapid-maturing habit of the plants that produce it. The quality of green corn, particularly as to tenderness and sweetness, is very dependent upon the stage of maturity at which it is cooked, sometimes the growth of only a few hours affecting the discernible sugar content. If the corn in a field from western seed in which the rapid-maturing habit was transmitted was gathered for canning when most of the ears were in prime green-corn condition, some of the ears would be so mature as to lower the average quality of the pack, but it would be impracticable to reject such slightly overmature ears, and the resulting poor quality of the pack would be charged to generally inferior stock rather than to the effect of the few older ears.

One indication that rapid development, with the consequent short period of prime canning condition, is an important, if not the chief, objection to western-grown seed, is the fact that experienced canners who insist upon eastern-grown seed of the earlier sorts, like Crosby, do not seriously object to well-grown western seed of the later and slower maturing sorts, like Evergreen and Country Gentleman.

Whatever may be the facts as to the relative merits of eastern and western grown seed, the writer believes that it is always true that the character of green corn is more or less affected by that of the soil on which the seed was grown. Seed grown in moderately rich but warm, well-drained, gravelly soils, like those common in Connecticut, New York, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, and some sections of Iowa, Nebraska and Minnesota, will give better and sweeter corn than seed grown on very rich mucky or prairie soils which would give large crops of field corn. It appears to be impossible to grow on a cold, heavy clay soil sweet-corn seed which will produce green corn of the highest quality.

SPIRÆA FOLIAGE SCORCHED.

Will you kindly tell me what is the matter with the enclosed spiræa foliage? We have them in a temperature of 55 degrees and have kept plenty of water on them. We have used tobacco stems once or twice, but with the plants covered with papers. There is only one plant as bad as the sample, but it is showing a little on several of the others. I hope you will be able to tell me what it is and a remedy for it.

D. B. K.

The leaves have been scorched by the fumigation. Tobacco stems are, as a fumigant, largely obsolete. They should never be used where spiræas are growing, as even when covered with papers the foliage is liable to be scorched. If you would in future use some of the specially prepared tobacco papers you will not damage your spiræa foliage at all, but will destroy aphids, etc., just as well as is done with the tobacco stems.

IT PAYS.

Of course the only evidence one needs is the way the Pacific coast advertising is growing, but what the advertisers say is of interest:

I want to thank you for the results so far obtained through advertising in The Review.—Max E. H. Keffel, proprietor Diamond Hill Nursery, Los Angeles, Cal., April 18, 1912.

The Market.

While there has been no glut of stock worth mentioning and practically nothing has been thrown away, it has taken a good deal of hustling on the part of the wholesalers to clean up in some lines and these busy men deserve a good deal of credit. Never, perhaps, in the history of the trade has so much local stock been in the market, and, besides this, northern stock has been arriving in more or less good order. Of course, shipping orders to outside points have helped materially, and without them there would undoubtedly have been a glut. As it now stands, the indoor rose growers will soon be throwing out stock, and we have Fiesta week and the Shriners' visit to take into consideration. Under these circumstances there is little likelihood of an over-supply after Memorial day.

Funeral work has been brisk and there have been decorations for various social affairs, while the pleasant weather has brought shoppers out in full force, which greatly helps the transient business. Maman Cochet and White Cochet are two of the finest outdoor roses just now, though the fine flowers of Ulrich Brunner and the charming little Cecil Brunners are seen everywhere. The climbing form of the latter is being planted a good deal and it appears to be as free as the bush variety and a much stronger grower.

Lilies disappeared as if by magic after Easter and the showings the last few weeks have been mighty poor. There are a few rubrums in, chiefly pot stock of a moderate quality only. Indoor roses are fine, especially Beauties, and carnations are holding up well. Good asparagus strings and smilax are scarce, leading to an increase in the demand for other greens. The huckleberry now being handled here is fine, hard, long-lasting and of a deep green color. Valley is plentiful and good. Orchids are coming much more freely and of better quality. Spanish and English irises, tulips, daffodils and ornithogalum are all in good supply and of fine quality.

Various Notes.

Among the many novelties at the Dieterich & Turner range at Montebello, and standing head and shoulders above them all, is the beautiful new Red Cherokee rose. The white and pink forms of this showy species, Rosa laevigata, are now well known, but the new-comer is quite distinct from either and a great advance. The color is the richest red, with the base of the petals shaded carmine, and this, with the yellow stamens, makes a lovely combination of coloring. The growth is as free as that of the older varieties and the flowers are just as freely produced. Owing to the exigencies of propagating, only a few plants have been allowed to flower, but I have seen it on several occasions and each time liked it better than the last. When it first appeared the name San Diego was given it, but, as the authorities of the San Diego exposition are offering a $1,000 prize for a new rose to be named for their town, Dieterich & Turner considerably withdrew the name. This is absolutely the first public mention of this fine novelty and not a line of advertising has as yet appeared; yet thousands of plants have already been ordered by trade visitors who have foreseen the great possibilities of this novelty. It will be offered just as soon as sufficient stock has been worked up.

Spanish irises, fresh and beautiful in coloring, and some excellent Empress daffodils were among the offerings at Creutz & Co.'s store at West Eighth street. Mr. Creutz says he has late Emperor coming on, which he hopes to be cutting for Memorial day.

Superintendent McLaren, of the Golden Gate park, San Francisco, has been in the city for a few days, looking up nursery stock.

Some of the finest outdoor roses seen this season were being handled by S. Murata on Hill street, as well as new crop sweet peas and exceptionally fine carnations. Mr. Murata has proven a worthy successor to S. Shima and has already established a good name for straight and businesslike dealings.

J. W. Wolters is more than pleased—in fact, quite surprised—at the amount of new transient business that has come to his new store on Hill street. He has some of the choicest of the society trade, which will follow him anywhere, and with this new addition to his business it looks as though the success of his new and spirited venture is assured.

Manager C. Morton, of the Los Angeles Flower Market, has invested in a new Buick, which he will doubtless find extremely useful in visiting his growers. Remember the speed limitations, Charlie.

At a recent luncheon party Charlie Lewis, of the Freeman-Lewis Co., used small baskets of Cecil Brunners tied with pink ribbon, which were quite effective. Business is good here.

The H. N. Gage Co. is handling large quantities of baled green moss, which is mighty useful in view of the shortage of sphagnum.

Has everybody heard Albert Knopf's story of the floral bell that was made too big to be taken through the door? In Los Angeles? Oh, no.

Morris Goldenson's store was broken into during the night of April 16 and $108 taken from the cash register. That burglar was a humorist, all right. He left behind a Canadian dime that Gordon has been trying to put over on unsuspecting customers and newspaper men for some time.

A. F. Borden is showing excellent outdoor lilacs. Business is fine here.

Tassano Bros. have moved from their Ninth street store and all business is now conducted from the store at 356 South Hill street. This gives Tony more time for moving around and he is making the most of it.

Norris & Son, the well known nurserymen of Washington street, report business as especially brisk in box, bay and other imported ornamentals.

Ferns and other stock are in fine condition at Staiger & Mundwiler's greenhouses and they have a grand stock of durantas. These excellent shrubs are not nearly as much grown as they should be. Paul Staiger is taking in a trip to San Francisco shortly.

Frank Lichtenberg has had several fine decorations of late, including one at Oxnard, Ventura county. He has certainly been going some since taking over the store himself.

Howard & Smith report that, despite the long drought, which delayed planting considerably, their business so far this year has been greatly in advance of that of any year in the firm's history. The roses and amaryllis at the Montebello nurseries of this firm are magnificent now and will well repay a visit. Many new seedlings of both are coming in line, showing great promise.

H. R. Richards.

PASADENA, CAL.

The seventh annual spring flower show was held under the auspices of the Pasadena Horticultural Society, formerly the Pasadena Gardeners' Association, April 11 to 13, in Central park and was a decided success. In addition to the private gardeners' exhibits and those for competition, the trade made a good showing. The only retailer's display noted was that of "The Orchid," which put up a nice assortment of cut flowers and plants. Ed. Rust made his usual fine show of conifers and nursery and pot stock, which was much admired.

Howard & Smith, of Los Angeles, made a fine exhibit, their superb varieties of amaryllis being the chief attraction, though much other choice stock was shown.

The Germain Seed & Plant Co., Robert Pegg, D. W. Coolidge and the Ross Nurseries all showed some of their specialties, and John H. Teekamp made a show with good tulips in pans.

LOS ANGELES FLOWER MARKET.

Quite recently, as has been noted in the Los Angeles news letter, Mr. Morton, having found his space much too small for the increasing business, leased the whole of the basement, the space shown in the picture being a portion only of the original market.

Mr. Morton is seen standing on the right in the picture and it is not too much to say that were it not for his untiring energy, his tact in dealing with customers and his knowledge of the business gained by long experience, this story of this successful house could not have been written. He modestly disclaims this and says that anyone else could have done the same as he. As the old Scotchman said, "I hae ma doots." Anyway, a whole lot of credit is due him, and his many eastern friends who knew him as a retailer in Chicago and elsewhere, will be glad to know that he has a fine and rapidly increasing business at Los Angeles, handling the entire cut from some twenty growers, among them some of the largest on the coast. The recent Easter business just about trebled that of a year ago. H. R. R.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Business conditions have been steady since Easter; what few plants there were left, came in handy, as there are always a few reciprocating orders to fill. Roses and carnations have been a little sluggish in their movements, yet there is plenty of stock, necessitating a daily consignment to the dump. Prices have maintained their standard, only the smaller stores having reduced prices to any extent. Outside stock in general is scarce, for which we give a sigh of relief.

Spring weddings are numerous and the demand for valley exceeds the supply. Orchids also find a ready sale. Shrubbery and rose bushes are rapidly putting out their leaves and in many instances buds are forming on the roses, although the weather is rather uncertain. Orders for bedding plants are held subject to weather conditions.

Various Notes.

F. W. Settlemeier, Woodburn, Ore., was a week-end caller.

Frank Luepke, of Vancouver, Wash., has had a course of hard luck; his family was quarantined for six weeks on account of scarlet fever, and it was with difficulty that he could attend to his business. The publicity given through the press also added to his troubles. E. R. C.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Business has got back to its normal condition after the Easter flurry. Stock of all kinds is fairly plentiful, but prices are lower than any of us like to see. Several growers have discarded their carnations, replacing them with cucumbers, but the supply of these flowers continues in excess of ordinary demand. Roses are plentiful and good. There are some lilies in most of the stores and they are being used largely in funeral work. Outside narcissi are plentiful, and good ones are selling well. Inquiries are being made for geraniums for bedding; the single varieties are almost exclusively used in this city. Other bedding stock is moving well, but the prices are on the down grade; the wholesale prices are less than the stock can possibly be grown for at any profit.

ASSOCIATION OF GARDENERS.

flower as its symbol for the year, Carnation Wodenethe was selected as the emblem of the association for 1912.

Among the speakers heard at the meeting were William Kleinheinz, who urged the gardeners to do their utmost to make the National Flower Show of next year a big success; John Dodds, who spoke on the benefits of belonging to the S. A. F., stating that the more the gardeners identify themselves with floricultural and horticultural organizations the greater will become the influence of their profession in the affairs of horticulture. George C. Watson strongly endorsed what Mr. Dodds had to say and added there was also a great work ahead for the National Association in the solving of the many problems which are still confronting the professional gardeners, but that coöperation among the gardeners will soon make this organization a power which will be of lasting benefit to the gardener. John Westcott also spoke of the great good that the S. A. F. has accomplished for the commercial men, saying that the same field is open to the National Association to accomplish equal good for the professional or private gardeners.

Other speakers heard were James Kennedy, president of the Elberon Horticultural Society; Benjamin Wyckoff, of Asbury Park; Austin C. Sayler and Walter Mott. Their subjects treated principally on the great progressiveness of the gardeners of this country and the bright outlook for the association.

At the close of the meeting the visiting members were entertained at a dinner given by the local members at the Hotel Dooner, the table being handsomely decorated with flowers provided by Mr. Watson. After the dinner the bowling contest between the individual members of the team which won the cup at the National Flower Show in Boston, in March of last year, was rolled on the

SPRAYING FOR TOMATO BLIGHT.

I am troubled with tomato blight. Will you kindly advise me when to begin spraying, how often to spray and when to stop? Will six pounds of copper sulphate, four pounds of lime and fifty gallons of water be the proper proportions for spraying? If not please give me the correct formula.

J. M. J.

The time to commence spraying tomatoes is when they are in the seed bed, before they become infected. If you are troubled with the blight in your section every year, it is important to begin early and keep it up until late in the season, at regular and frequent intervals, probably about two weeks apart.

I like a 5-5-50 formula better than a 6-4-50 one for tomatoes. Try to use

Three and five year old Asparagus roots for immediate planting. Also natural peach pits, sprouting.

I am the only party handling these large roots. The peach sprouts are just ready to set out.

WARREN SHINN,

Nurseryman

Woodbury, N. J.

These new houses are heated by the new Kroeschell hot water system of heating and a No. 15 Kroeschell boiler, which has a capacity of 50,000 square feet of glass at 60 degrees at 15 degrees below zero. For the piping system 4-inch threaded boiler tubes are used. Each return line is controlled by a small gate valve. The first boiler Mr. Yonker installed was placed in a deep pit. With the present system the boiler may be set on the same level as the greenhouse walks and the No. 15 boiler is in a "pit" the floor of which is twenty-four inches below the level of the greenhouse beds. The old boiler pit was partially filled in and now can be used for growing either mushrooms or asparagus.

the spray mixture the day it is mixed, as it loses strength if held over. The quickest and best way to mix it is to dump the copper sulphate into five gallons or less of boiling water and stir it hard for a few minutes, and again in about fifteen minutes, instead of waiting all day for it to dissolve in cold water. Slake your lime in another bucket. Do not let the lime burn dry and do not drown it with water; give it a little water every few minutes until slaked under high temperature. Then pour both into the barrel of water and mix thoroughly. Stir often while using it.

YONKER'S VEGETABLE RANGE.

Twelve years ago R. Yonker, Grand Rapids, Mich., built a small greenhouse for growing vegetables. In those days the greenhouses were of low construction and a house twenty feet wide was considered a big one. Mr. Yonker devoted the house to leaf lettuce, Grand Rapids variety; radishes and parsley, and the products were sold to the grocers of Grand Rapids. The business for the first season was encouraging and the following year several additional houses were built.

The business has grown from its small beginning until today Mr. Yonker has one of the most up-to-date ranges of vegetable houses in the state of Michigan. The new houses erected last season are Garland iron frame, each 34x275. The eaves or gutters are eleven feet high. There are no posts; the roof is supported by truss construction. This permits placing the heating pipes six feet or more above the beds and permits working the soil by horse.

The greenhouses are supplied with an overhead sprinkling system, and each house, 275 feet in length, can be watered from one point. One illustration shows one of the large new greenhouses in full crop with Grand Rapids lettuce. Many of the plants weigh nearly a pound. The pictures were taken January 10, 1912, and as soon as this crop was cut, new lettuce plants were planted immediately, so as not to lose a day's time. The cucumber plants for early spring forcing are already in pots and will be planted in the beds just as soon as the last crop of lettuce is cut.

In building a greenhouse two important points are a good watering system and a high smokestack. In the illustration showing an outdoor view of the new range of Mr. Yonker the large boiler and packing shed, high water tank and smokestack will be noted. The packing shed is equipped with every labor-saving device. The shed is large enough to load the large market wagons indoors. The packing shed is illuminated by a gasoline lighting system and of course also is provided with telephones. In one corner of the building there is the neatly equipped private office of Mr. Yonker.

SUPPORTING CUCUMBERS.

Three beds in my greenhouse are filled with lettuce about six inches high, with cucumbers, showing the second leaf, through the center of each bed. Will you please give instructions as to the best method for supporting the cucumbers, and some hints as to their future treatment?

J. V. S.

The vines may be trained on wires running the length of the house, one above the other, keeping them at least a foot away from the glass and following up to the ridge. As soon as the lettuce is cut, the cukes will need all the beds for root room. Keep the temperature at 65 to 68 degrees at night and about 85 degrees on bright days.

TORONTO.

The Market.

The weather has been fine and business excellent. There is an unusual quantity of funeral work, which is helping things considerably. Stock is plentiful and arriving in good condition. Those dealers who put on special price sales on Saturday report an excellent trade in valley, sweet peas and violets for corsage bouquets. Social events are quite numerous and this class of trade is good.

Various Notes.

Jno. H. Dunlop is exhibiting samples of the new Mme. Russell rose in his window and the display is attracting considerable attention.

April 18 the body of David Cooper was found at the entrance to High park. It was at first thought that Mr. Cooper had committed suicide, but investigation showed that his death was due to apoplexy. Of late years Mr. Cooper had conducted a store at 615 Dundas street. Previous to going into business for himself he worked in the greenhouses of John H. Dunlop. Some years ago, he worked in the retail store of Charles Scrim, Ottawa, Ont.

NURSERY NEWS.AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1911-12: Pres., J. H. Dayton, Painesville, O.; Vice-pres., W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-seventh annual meeting, Boston, June 1912.

THE Wooster Nursery Co., Wooster, O., has increased its capital stock from $10,000 to $50,000.

THE death of P. J. Hallberg, for many years in the nursery business at Emporia, Kan., is reported in this week's obituary column.

THE nursery of Pottenger Bros., at Waldron, Ill., has been purchased by James W. Pottenger, of Kankakee, Ill., and the stock will be transferred to his thirty-acre farm at the latter city. Marshall A. Pottenger, the former owner, will be connected with the new concern as landscape gardener and salesman. The business will hereafter be conducted under the name of the Kankakee Nursery Co.

FRITZ HUBER, JR., of the Jennings Nursery Co., Jennings, La., narrowly escaped death recently while he was blasting with dynamite, preparing ground for tree planting, near town. He had two sticks of dynamite in a pail of water, and while standing over the pail a stick exploded in the ground, causing an explosion of the two sticks in the pail, injuring his leg badly and severely bruising other parts of his body.

Z. C. SMITH, Maywood, Ill., in speaking of the incorporation of the Maywood Nursery Co., says: "This was done only to protect the name, no stock being offered to anyone, and no change will be made of any kind. This nursery is owned by me, and as I have been doing business for years under the name of Maywood Nurseries, I did not want anyone else to be able to use the name, as could have been done by starting a corporation." Mr. Smith's specialty is ornamentals.

EVERGREEN SEEDLINGS.

The U. S. Board of General Appraisers still is engaged in laying down rulings as to what are and what are not evergreen seedlings. The collectors at the various ports are in the habit of assessing duty on pretty nearly everything in the way of nursery stock at twenty-five per cent, leaving it to the importer to demonstrate that the plants are indeed evergreen in character and grown from seeds, in which case they are entitled to free entry as evergreen seedlings in accordance with the decision in the Rolker case, G. A. 5305. In the case of Harris, recently reported, Abies Nordmanniana, Abies brachyphylla, Taxus baccata and Skimmia

Aurora, Ill.

Japonica were added to the list of varieties that the board orders to be admitted free and now, in a decision handed down April 10 in the case of Wm. Larzelere & Co., the board has still further extended the list. The decision is as follows:

WAITE, General Appraiser: "It is claimed in these protests that merchandise which has been assessed as nursery stock under paragraph 264, tariff act of 1909, should be free of duty as evergreen seedlings under paragraph 668. In the case of Re Harris, Abs. (T. D.) 408080, etc., the question of the meaning and scope of the term evergreen seedlings was considered, and the previous decision of the board (G. A. 5305, T. D. 24305) on the same question was followed, holding that the term applies to an evergreen propagated from the seed, as distinguished from one grown from a stock or cutting, regardless of the age or size of the plant, or the fact that it may have been transplanted. We therefore adopt that definition in arriving at a conclusion regarding the items involved in these protests.

"From the testimony taken in these cases and the catalogues introduced in evidence marked exhibit 1-A and exhibit 2, it appears that the following described evergreens involved in these protests were from seeds: Abies excelsa, A. concolor, A. pectinata, A. Nordmanniana and A. Pinsapo; Pinus Austriaca and P. sylvestris, Juniperus Virginiana, Thuja occidentalis, Taxus baccata and Kalmia latifolia.

"The protests are therefore sustained in so far as they relate to the above enumerated varieties of evergreens, and

The Market.

Business last week was better than for some time. The unavoidable glut in carnations, especially of the Enchantress variety, which was so evident for some time, has eased up and conditions are more nearly normal again. Plenty of Easter and calla lilies come in daily and do not move extra well, and the same can be said of the darker shades of snapdragon. Violets are nearing their season's end. Greenhouse smilax is about the only article of which there is no oversupply.

Various Notes.

Currie Bros. Co. reported business rushing last week, especially in funeral work.

Aug. F. Kellner, who made a business trip to Eau Claire and Neenah, Wis., the early part of last week, was the only absent member of the bowling club April 16.

J. M. Fox & Son had the order for the Robinson wedding in Racine, Wis., April 23. The A. F. Kellner Co. did the plant work for that occasion. It was one of the most elaborate affairs of the Bell City for a long time.

Frank Cadillac, of Evanston, Ill., has opened a stand at Gimbel Bros.' department store to dispose of a general line of nursery stock.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. reports shipping trade fine and is cutting some Killarney roses that are hard to beat.

The Gust Rusch Co. is receiving some fine Richmond and Killarney from the Illinois growers.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. claims that it is surprising how the great amount of the daily cut from the Wauwatosa plant keeps moving all the time.

Thursday, May 2, the regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Club takes place and President Hunkel desires a good attendance. Being only three days previous to Easter Sunday, the last meeting was postponed for one month, as no quorum was present.

Visitors last week were: Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Beer, Marshfield, Wis.; F. Kesting, West Bend, Wis.; W. E. Merklein, Stevens Point, Wis.; Adam Zender, Rogers Park, Ill. E. O.

LANCASTER, PA.

A meeting of the Lancaster Florists' Club was held April 18, with a full attendance and several new members.

Chas. B. Weaver, of Ronks, Pa., read a paper on "Sweet Peas" and exhibited fine vases of Mont Blanc, Mrs. Chas. H. Totty, Mrs. F. H. Dolansky and a selection from Earliest of All.

The usual fine display of carnations was staged, with an extra fine vase of Lawson from a new source, Mr. Brackbill, of Lampeter, Pa. It is really remarkable how well Lawson is grown by a few of our local growers.

A committee was appointed to arrange for a summer picnic. It was suggested that at our next meeting several of the retail growers bring plants in and have a discussion as to what it costs to produce them, and see whether a more uniform rate of selling can be established.

A. M. Herr.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

A regular monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held at Pembroke hall on the evening of April 10, with President J. F. Johnston in the chair. One application for membership was received.

The society, on behalf of one of its members, offers prizes of $10 and $5 for the best kept cottage gardens in Glen Cove during the coming summer, those who employ help not allowed to compete.

Offers of special prizes for our fall show were received from the following: Stumpp & Walter Co., Peter Henderson & Co., Julius Roehrs Co., J. M. Thorburn & Co., Vaughan's Seed Store, Cottage Gardens, Mrs. J. R. Maxwell, Robert Meserole, H. C. Smith and the Pino-Lyptol Co.

Prizes will be offered at the next meeting for three lettuces, two cauliflower flowers and six tomatoes.

J. M.

Peekskill, N. Y.—Mrs. J. D. Sherman, the Paulding street florist, recently presented to the board of park commissioners a fine specimen of Paulownia imperialis which she had grown from seed sent to her some years ago by the Department of Agriculture at Washington. It will be planted in Depew park.

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

A great surplus of cut flowers was on hand last week, due to the sunshine and warmer weather. All kinds of flowers, roses, carnations, violets and sweet peas were down in price, and great quantities found their way to the rubbish barrel. Business has kept up well since Easter, but the supply was far greater than the demand; hence the accumulation of stock. Funeral work has been most heavy, and a few good weddings and decorations helped to keep the florists busy. The quality of carnations and roses is much better than the prices indicate.

Violets show symptoms of spring fever, for they begin to drop their petals, lose their color and curl up in the neck of the flower. Sweet peas are taking the place of violets, for they are fine. Gardenias are coming into the market in splendid shape and pansies are used largely for corsages. Valley is good, but not overabundant, and snapdragons are finding great favor in the downtown stores, and flowering plants of all kinds are much in demand. Cut ferns and asparagus are plentiful.

Various Notes.

Miss Lillian Wheeler, of the Rochester Floral Co., has been ill for a week with tonsillitis, but is expected back at work soon.

William Palmer, of Buffalo, N. Y., was in town April 15 on business.

J. B. Keller Sons had a pretty spring window of lavender crocus and white tulips, with a background of palms.

George Boucher has some fine Lady Washington geraniums, which seem to sell well.

The Maurer & Haap Co. reports that the spring trade in nursery stock and seeds has begun in earnest.

H. E. Wilson has temporarily rented his recently acquired place to a tailor. He will not occupy it himself for a time at least.

Harry P. Neun has opened his nursery department and is selling seeds, shrubs and ornamental trees, as well as cut flowers and plants.

The Rochester Home Circle, the ladies' florists' club, elected the following officers at a meeting held April 12 at the home of Mrs. William Keller: President, Mrs. William Keller; first vice-president, Mrs. Fred Vick; second vice-president, Mrs. Edwin Wilson; third vice-president, Mrs. Chas. Suhr; secretary, Mrs. John Dunbar; treasurer, Mrs. E. R. Fry. E. C. A.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

Trade continues quiet, which means that stock is plentiful. There has been little funeral work in the last week, also only a slight amount of decorating. Carnations have shortened somewhat, but sweet peas are more than plentiful. Callas and Easter lilies are plentiful, while orchids, valley and violets are not having much call. Beauties and other roses are first-class stock. Snapdragons and iris are receiving a good call.

The flower market is overflowing with stock, but business is reported unsatisfactory.

Various Notes.

E. A. Nelson has been spending a week at Lake Webster, fishing.

Paul Hoffman, with A. Wiegand & Sons, spent a few days in Chicago last week.

S. T. Hitz has been cutting some first-class snapdragon.

John Bertermann and family have removed to their Cumberland home for the summer.

Carl Sonnenschmidt is the latest florist to purchase an automobile. He is spending most of his time acquainting himself with the mechanism of a new Premier roadster.

Alfred Brandt spent a day in Richmond this week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Rieman, of Connersville, were visitors last week.

A. Wiegand & Sons received a large shipment of box trees this week.

Baur & Steinkamp have material on hand for a new 300-foot house. This firm reports a heavy sale on small geraniums this year, having entirely sold out of them. H. L. W.

BROCKTON, MASS.

W. W. Hathaway reports that in spite of more competition he had the best Easter on record. It was a great plant season. Lilies led, as usual. Next in favor came bulbous plants, followed by rambler roses, azaleas and lilacs. Few plants were left unsold. In cut flowers, violets were scarce and rather poor, with a heavy demand. Carnations sold well, but roses were less called for. Department stores competed with the flower stores with Easter lilies, which they sold at 12½ cents to 15 cents per bud and bloom, but the florists easily sold out their entire stock at higher prices than these. W. N. C.

PITTSBURGH.

The Market.

The wholesalers are decidedly busy people just now, handling immense quantities of flowers of all kinds, and to the uninitiated they would seem to be coining money, but there is nothing to it. Some of the prices at which the big lots of stock are unloaded would disgust a peanut merchant, but it must be got rid of at some price. One can get almost anything he wants and the more he buys the less his bill is, as the merchants seem to offer premiums to anyone who will get a big lot out of sight. Now, that's wholesale.

Among the retailers things are not so bad. They are going along doing a nice business and can get just what they want when they want it, and at the right price. So these deluge times do not worry them so much, if they keep off the streets where the fakers are working, but it always gives a florist more or less of a pain to see a faker disposing of stock at his prices, no matter what the quality.

Plantmen are beginning to get saucy. Just a few more days and planting will begin; even if a few are frozen, that is all the better, but the market displays are getting better every day. Hoo-Hoo.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

The Market.

Business since Easter has been quiet. Cut flowers of all kinds are plentiful, also potted plants. The outside planting has not yet begun in earnest, owing to the uncertainty of frost and excessive rains.

Various Notes.

C. L. Niednagel has given up his plan of moving away from this city and will begin the erection of two houses on his home place at once. The houses will be 34x250 feet each and planted to American Beauties and Killarney for wholesale. He will run his place independently of the other plant. He has just refused $9,000 for his four and one-third acres of ground, but may sell a part of it later.

Karl Zeidler is putting in concrete benches in his new houses.

Carl Elspemann has returned home, but will go away again. He has been with Bassett & Washburn, at Hinsdale, Ill., and Harry Hoffman, of Jacksonville, Ill., for several months.

AGERATUMS FOR BORDERS.

Can you tell me what sort of ageratum is best for planting for a border? I have tried several kinds, but they grow too tall and wild and do not have many flowers. I planted Little Blue Star and the customers made the complaint that it grew too rank and was a foot tall. Let me know which is the best. E. B.

Try Ageratum Stella Gurney. This is a splendid dwarf variety. Princess Pauline is also good. C. W.

BONE.

Bone meal is prepared by boiling the raw bones under sufficient steam pressure to remove the fat, after which they are ground into a somewhat gritty meal which contains from four to five per cent of nitrogen and forty-five to forty-eight per cent of phosphate. Though the fat has been removed, the cartilage remains, and this has the effect of retarding the breaking up of the particles after the meal has been applied to the soil, so that it is considered a slow-acting manure. As, however, used on garden soils, which are usually of an acid character, or as an ingredient of potting compost, where the roots are brought into intimate contact with it, the action is much quicker, though even then the results of its use the second year after application should be little less than the first year. Where, however, the soil is sandy or poor in humus it would be better to use what is known as bone flour, the difference between this and bone meal being that the boiling of the raw bones is conducted under such a high pressure of steam, some fifty pounds to the square inch, that not only is the fat removed, but the whole of the cartilaginous matter as well, with the result that the bones can be ground into a finer meal, which acts much more readily in the soil, but it is at the expense of a considerable portion of the nitrogen, the analysis being only one to one and one-half per cent of nitrogen, though as much as sixty per cent or more of phosphate. Neither bone meal nor bone flour is recom-

Greenhouse Heating.

A MASSACHUSETTS RANGE.

Will you kindly inform me as to the best way to heat my greenhouses with hot water? My houses may be described as follows, beginning at the north side of the range: House No. 1 runs east and west. It is 20 x 108, ten feet high to the ridge and five feet to the eaves, and contains raised benches. At the west end of this house is the potting shed, and under the potting shed is a boiler—the larger one of the two boilers which are used to heat the range. House No. 2, which is three-quarter span, also runs east and west, along the south side of No. 1 and the potting shed. No. 2 is 26½ x 132½, twelve feet high to the ridge, five feet high to the back eave and three feet to the front eave, and contains solid beds. Houses No. 1 and 2 are used for a general crop—carnations, chrysanthemums and all sorts of pot plants. South of these two houses, and parallel with them, is a violet house, 10 x 56, eight and one-half feet to the ridge and five feet to the eaves. Running across the east ends of Nos. 1 and 2 is a lean-to house which is used for propagating. It is 9½ x 52, seven feet high at the back and five feet at the front. The smaller of the two boilers is located in this propagating shed, at the east end of house No. 2.

At present the houses are piped with 4-inch pipes, with calked joints, except a 3-inch flow and return in the center of each house. The boiler under the potting shed runs a 4-inch pipe—a flow and return—up each side of house No. 1, as well as a 3-inch flow and return up the center of the same house. It also runs a 4-inch flow and return up the north side of house No. 2. The boiler at the east end of house No. 2 runs a 4-inch pipe—a flow and return—around the propagating house, and a 4-inch flow and return up the south side of house No. 2, as well as a 3-inch flow and return up the center of the same house. In the violet house there are no pipes as yet.

Now, these 4-inch pipes with calked joints do not do their work as I should like them to do it, for it keeps me busy to prevent the houses from freezing in zero weather, although I believe the boilers could do the work if the houses were properly piped with smaller pipes. What size of pipes would you advise me to put in, and how many flows and returns for each house? I should also like to run a pipe, or as many as would be needed, into the violet house from house No. 2. This would be intended merely to keep it from freezing, while in the other houses I should like to run the temperature as near 50 degrees as possible, in zero weather. My location is near Boston, Mass.

R. K. R.

The letter does not give any idea of the capacity of the two boilers and hence it is not possible to tell just how the radiation should be divided between them.

It is suggested that from the boiler under the potting room a 3-inch flow run directly east under the ridge of house No. 1, and that when over the east end of the middle bench a 2½-inch pipe be dropped down and used to feed

work well together

It costs no more to have free and clear steam lines and an efficient heating system than to have sluggish lines and an inefficient heating system.

It's useless to expect good results when trying to put steam through coils that are half full of condensation.

"Detroit" Return Traps not only keep lines clear of water but automatically return it directly to the boiler at practically the same temperature at which it is condensed.

Once installed, "Detroit" Return Traps are always on the job.

THE KROESCHELL GREENHOUSE BOILER

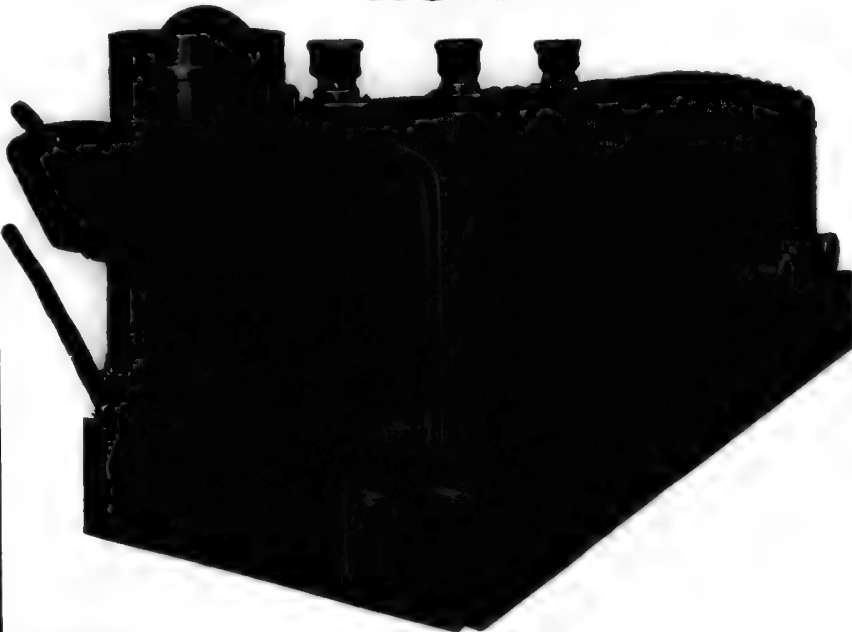

Here is the boiler that is making the most wonderful greenhouse heating record in the world. Florists and gardeners who have used other makes are constantly giving the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler the highest praise.

10,766,000 square feet of glass was equipped with the Kroeschell Boiler during the past five years. You will find the new 1910 model Kroeschell Hot Water Boiler in every state in the Union and Canada.

Kroeschell vs. Cast Iron Boilers

Over 1500 Cast Iron Boilers were replaced by the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler during the past six years. It is a common occurrence for a Kroeschell to replace two to four cast iron boilers at a single place; this is the CENTRAL HEATING SYSTEM PLAN, and has saved many florists hundreds of dollars per season in fuel alone, besides a big saving in labor.

OUR HEATING ENGINEER has probably had more practical experience in this line than any other greenhouse man, and we place his experience at your service.

WHAT THE USERS SAY

Kroeschell Replaces Three (3) Cast Iron Boilers.

We purchased of you this spring a No. 6 Kroeschell Boiler, which you guaranteed would take the place of three cast iron boilers. Well, the whole thing in a nutshell is this—your word is as good as gold. Night before last we had a severe storm of snow and sleet and a very high wind; we had not the least bit of trouble. We fired the last at 10 p. m., November 24, and the next morning at 7 o'clock we looked at the houses and found it only 1 degree less than when we fired the last coal, 9 hours earlier. If this isn't magnificent work and a good test, we would be pleased to hear from anyone else that could furnish a better boiler. We know if parties wishing a boiler would get one from you they never would try any other. We think in 5 years' running of this boiler we will have the price saved in the difference in our coal bill. Wishing you the best of success, we remain,

Very truly yours,

Adam Laub & Son, Hughsonville, N. Y.

Kroeschell Boiler Better than Tubular Boilers or Cast Iron Boilers.

Washington Court House, Ohio. Have used upright boiler, tubular boiler and cast iron boiler. The Kroeschell Boiler heats up better and easier than any other boiler we have ever had anything to do with. If we ever buy another, it will certainly be a Kroeschell.

Very truly yours,

Poole & Purllant.

THE KROESCHELL PIPING SYSTEM—

Circulation is perfect. Cheaper and better than 1, 1½, 1¾ or 2-in. threaded pipe. Overcomes all the disadvantages of 4-in. cast iron pipe. No deep boiler pits required.

THE KROESCHELL GENERATOR—

Cures sluggish circulation. Water travels three to five times faster. Saves fuel. Prevents boiling over. Water can be heated to 240 degrees without boiling, making it possible to have steam temperatures in your piping if wanted. Greatly improves systems having long mains and coils. Can be connected to any hot water system, no matter what kind of boiler or piping is used. Easy to install—simply attach to your present expansion pipe.

WHAT THE USERS SAY

Cast Iron Boilers Cause Freeze-out—Kroeschell Boilers no Worry.

I bought a No. 2 boiler in 1902. Takes care of 7000 sq. ft. of glass—would take care of 2000 more. I have had a cast iron boiler, but it broke down twice in four years, always in the coldest weather. It broke down Dec. 29, 1904, and I lost all my stock in consequence. I have now two No. 2 and one No. 6 Kroeschell boilers and do not worry about their breaking down.

Grant Newport, Cedar Rapids, Ia.

The Kroeschell Does Our Work Easier than Cast Iron Boilers and Saves 20% to 25% Fuel.

The No. 4 boiler is heating 10,000 sq. ft. of glass—it would take care of 13,000 sq. ft. easy. Have no trouble to keep temperature of 50 and 60 degrees in coldest weather. The boiler has given perfect satisfaction. We had two cast iron boilers, one rated for 1200 ft. of pipe and one rated for 1500 ft. These boilers never did the work at their best and when the greenhouses were new. According to our experience with yours, we will save 20 to 25 per cent of fuel.

Hild Bros., Lake Forest, Ill.

Try the Kroeschell First—It's Ahead of Them All.

I have had eight or ten other types of boilers. The Kroeschell is the best I have ever used. Your boiler heats the water very quickly—almost as fast as steam.

Yours very truly, boiler run a 2½-inch pipe under the ridge of house No. 2 to the west end, and, dropping down at the end of the middle bench, feed two 2-inch return pipes in a coil under the bench.

To heat the coil under the south bench of house No. 2, run a 3-inch flow pipe on the plate of the south wall. At a point opposite the west end of the violet house take off a 2½-inch pipe and carry it through just below the level of the plant, into the violet house, where it should be connected with coils of three 2-inch pipes under each of the benches. The flow pipe should be continued to the west end of house No. 2, where it should be dropped down and connected with a coil of four 2-inch returns under the south bench, which starts under the bench at the northwest corner of house No. 2.

In the propagating house run a 2½-inch main under the ridge to the north end and connect with a coil of three 2-inch pipes under each of the side benches. These, of course, should be joined, and should be connected with the boiler by means of a 2½-inch main return.

A MICHIGAN CARNATION HOUSE.

Kindly let me know how many lengths of 2-inch pipe will be needed to heat a carnation house 21 x 62, six feet high to the gutter and eleven feet high to the ridge. The north side and both ends are exposed; the south wall consists of two feet of concrete and four feet of glass. Please state, also, how many 3-inch flow pipes will be required.
J. W. L.

To heat a carnation house 21 x 62 feet, with four feet of glass in one wall, when the mercury is 20 degrees below zero, it will be well to use two 3-inch flow pipes and ten 2-inch returns. Under the conditions mentioned, however, it might be still better to use three 2½-inch flow pipes and nine 2-inch returns. One flow pipe could then be upon each wall and the other under the ridge, with the returns distributed under the benches, or a part of these could be upon each wall, if preferred.

Gentlemen: In reply to yours of the 4th inst., will say that your No. 4 boiler has given entire satisfaction. I consider this boiler a great improvement over the other style boilers in my place, of which I have two. For quick results it has them all beat. LANCASTER, N. Y.

Thomas Perino, a night man employed in the greenhouses of W. J. Palmer & Son, was found dead in the boiler room of the greenhouses April 10 by his fellow employee, Rudolph Dutchlander. Perino's skull had been crushed and his clothing set on fire. A coal shovel spattered with blood was lying on the floor in the boiler room.

Perino was an industrious man who had worked hard, brought up a family of six children and bought his home. He had been in the employ of W. J. Palmer & Son for several years. He has had the night trick at the greenhouses not more than a month or six weeks. He and Dutchlander, who worked with him, were expected in addition to their other duties to make the rounds of the eight acres of greenhouses at intervals during the night, and register from watchman's boxes during each tour. Perino made his last round after midnight and the registers show that he pulled the last box in his section of the plant at 12:30. At 2 a. m. Dutchlander instituted search and the body was found, the clothing blazing, jammed into a small aperture in the rear of the boilers. Dutchlander extinguished the fire and summoned help. A physician who was called said the man had been dead more than an hour.

KOKOMO, IND.

The Northern Indiana Florists' Association held one of its quarterly meetings here April 17, there being an attendance of about thirty-five, including most of the florists in this section of the state. Most of the day was spent in visiting the greenhouse establishments here. Dinner was at the Francis hotel, and there was a general discussion of the subjects of special interest to those in the trade in this section. The next meeting will be the annual one, for the election of officers, and will take place at Winona Lake July 17. D. J. Conner, Jr., of Wabash, now occupies the presidency.

In the evening six members of the association residing in Warsaw, Elkhart and Goshen were in a wreck on the traction line, near Cassville, about twelve miles out of Kokomo. Several of the passengers were injured, but the florists, with their usual good luck, escaped unhurt.

Hannibal, Mo.—Harry Surrell, of Sunnyside addition, recently purchased the vacant property adjoining his residence and in the near future will erect a greenhouse and grow vegetables.

Little Stories of ANCIENT POTTERY

The earliest record of pottery is found in the first book of Moses (Gen. xi., 2, 3), where it is said of the wandering families of men, that "as they journeyed from the east, they found a plain in the land of Shinar; and they dwelt there. And they said one to another, Go to, let us make brick and burn them thoroughly. And they had brick for stone and slime for mortar." Men who knew how to make brick, of course, had pottery in other forms.

The oldest bricks hitherto discovered were found at Warka. They bear the name of King Uruk and a dedication to the moon, and are supposed to date 2200 B. C. Perhaps in nothing is the enduring character better illustrated than in the fact that on bricks of that date are visible the marks of the feet of birds and weasels, which ran over them when they were lying in the sun to dry before baking.

Among the most remarkable objects in pottery are coffins found by a Mr. Layard at Niffer, and in vast numbers at Warkaw, by a Mr. Loftus, who says that this spot appears to have been a sacred burial place for a period of probably 2500 years. He found the burial mounds to be literally masses of the dead to the depth of 30 feet, and he estimated the depth to be 30 feet more.

The custom seems to have been to make the lower part of the coffin, which received the body, and then place or mould over it the lid and then bake the jar with the enclosed remains.

Mr. Loftus found numerous specimens in a form resembling an oval dish cover, the sides sloping out toward the base. These were from 4 to 7 feet long, 2 feet wide, and from 1 to 3 feet deep. But the most interesting coffins were slipper shaped; the oval opening closed with a lid.

These were ornamented with embossed figures of warriors, in panels, the whole visible surface covered with a rich green enamel on the exterior, and blue within the aperture. The interior shows traces of red matting. The coffins probably date from the Sassarrean Period.

NOTES ON SWEET PEAS.

and had little or no trouble from this disease, which goes to prove that it is a hot weather disease. Peas for mid-winter blooming were sown in August at a new location, remote from the older houses, where as yet I could find no trace of this troublesome disease. Possibly by using movable greenhouses we could travel ahead of this trouble.

The green worms never caused us much trouble until last season, when they seemed to come in droves. I tried poisoning with different compounds, but few seemed to be killed by this means and we had to resort to hand-picking.

Bud-dropping is caused by too sudden changes from long continued warm weather to dark, cloudy weather or the reverse, or by too high an artificial temperature, followed by a sudden drop.

The Right Temperature.

As to temperature, during midwinter we run a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees and 60 to 65 degrees during bright, clear weather. Toward spring we drop to 45 or 47 degrees at night, with the same day temperature as during midwinter.

Sweet peas require constant attention after the vines are tall enough for supports, so that they may be kept growing erect. In fact, from that time on during the blooming period more labor is required than for any other greenhouse crop—that is, if you wish to handle the stock carefully and for profit. Though the demand for these flowers is increasing, so also is the supply, and I find that you must have decidedly better stock now than several years ago, to obtain a fair, average price.

We ship altogether to commission houses in different cities, which I consider the only way to market cut flowers.

Mr. Heckenkamp is also building an additional greenhouse on his new property opposite Woodland cemetery.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

CLEVELAND.

The Sixth City.

The market last week was just what everyone expected it would be after Easter. There was a heavy glut of stock of all kinds and a light demand. Sweet peas have been the one exception, as the demand for this popular flower has kept the supply cleaned up daily. The consignments of Easter lilies have been extremely heavy; many growers have come in one to two weeks late with their Easter lots and these have flooded the market. The quality of roses, especially Killarney and White Killarney, was never better at this season of the year. Carnations are also of No. 1 quality. Greens, such as plumosus, Sprengeri and adiantum, have had a strong call. Callas are about to bid their farewell for this season.

Advertising Mothers' Day.

A campaign to advertise Mothers' day has been started here. The results obtained last year from this source were so gratifying to the local florists that the movement this year meets with ready response. A committee has been appointed by the Florists' Club to solicit subscriptions, ranging from $5 to $20, from each firm, according to the amount of their business; $300 is the amount which has been subscribed, which is much larger than the fund of last year, and great results are expected.

Banners are to be placed on street cars, autos and delivery wagons. Cards are to be displayed in street cars, and announcements are to be made in the local papers. Any florist who looks back and sees the amount of business he did last year as the result of such advertising can not help but subscribe freely this year.

Let everybody boost Mothers' day, not only by the wearing of carnations, but by the sending of baskets of flowers, potted plants, loose flowers, etc. It is bound to become a great day for the florist, if properly advertised.

Various Notes.

The Cleveland Florists' Club is to hold a May party at Chamber of Industry hall in the near future. The exact date will be announced later.

The Bate brothers, Guy, Herbert and George, will guide their annual fishing party to their summer camp at Mud Lake, near Akron, next week. Those fishes with the red, white and blue scales are surely fine catching.

MOTHERS' DAY PREPARATIONS

THE RETAILERS GET READY.

Ordering Plenty of Stock.

Since last week's issue of The Review reached the trade, wholesale florists all over the country have had a steadily increasing number of inquiries and orders for special supplies for Mothers' day, May 12. It is apparent that the retail florists everywhere are preparing for a greatly increased demand, excellent as was the business for Mothers' day last year.

It is right and proper that retailers should assure themselves of adequate supplies for this, the same as for other special flower days. But one thing should not be overlooked: Mothers' day is not an old and well established flower day, like Easter or Decoration day; Mothers' day is in its infancy, so to speak, and the public, proverbially short-minded, may forget "to honor the best mother who ever lived—your own," unless reminded of it.

Don't Let Them Forget.

He is either a venturesome or a short-sighted retailer who stocks up heavily for Mothers' day and does nothing to bring the day to public notice.

The Mothers' day advertising done last year will bear fruit again this season, but don't trust to that. Employ whatever form of advertising you have found best suited to your local needs, but by all means do something to bring Mothers' day to the attention of your customers.

The best way to boost Mothers' day is to advertise it in the daily papers. A lot of mayors and governors have issued proclamations, but a good many of them have neglected to mention the wearing of flowers, or their use in Mothers' day decorations. That is up to the florists. If your ingenuity is equal to a special Mothers' day window decoration, put it on, but at least get some nicely lettered display cards for your window.

Push Colored Flowers.

The momentum gained in the last couple of years and the fresh impetus given by the Mothers' day articles in recent issues of the big magazines and newspapers insure a demand for more white carnations than it will be possible to supply. Mothers' day is not an occasion which will stand high prices; indeed, the greatest danger lies in too great an increase in values. Therefore it is necessary for everyone to do his part toward turning the demand, not away from white carnations, but to include other colors and other flowers. We do not want a Mothers' day limited by the possibilities of supplying white carnations. To have its full value to the trade the use of every flower must be appropriate to Mothers' day.

Of course it is easier to work along the lines of least resistance and sell everyone white carnations as long as they last, but after that we either have to shut up shop or sell the people something else. Might as well begin at the beginning and push colored stock; sell it wherever you can, but give them white when they will not take anything else.

White flowers for Mother's memory.
Bright flowers for Mothers living.

Let that phrase appear in all your Mothers' day publicity. Those who tried it last year found that it worked finely. See the letters on page 10 of last week's issue of The Review. Note what the Idle Hour Nurseries, of Macon, Ga., said: "We got our leading local paper to reprint 'The Story of Mothers' Day' as it appeared in The Review and we took the advertisement The Review suggested, containing the lines:

A White flower for Mother's memory.
Bright flowers for Mothers living.

"The advertisement we spread across five columns of the paper, using a space five inches deep. The results were beyond our expectations. White flowers had first call, but bright flowers had an even larger sale, for there were more of them. The Review is entitled to credit for showing the trade how to popularize the day so quickly."

THE WHITE CARNATION.

Mothers' day has inspired the people as nothing else has done—and it is easy to get newspaper publicity for it. The average florist will prefer to feature

White flowers for Mother's memory,
Bright flowers for Mothers living—but if you think your supply of white carnations will stand it, hand the following verses by Margaret E. Sangster to your local newspaper with a request for publication in a Mothers' day article May 11:

THE WHITE CARNATION.

Here's to the white carnation,
Sturdy and spicy and sweet,
Wafting a breath of perfume
On the stony way of the street;
Bringing a freight of gladness
Wherever the breezes blow;
Here's to the white carnation,
Pure as the virgin snow.

This is the flower for Mother,
Wear it on Mothers' day;
Flower for rain and sunshine,
Winsome, gallant and gay.
Wear it in Mother's honor.
Pinned to the coat's lapel;
Wear it in belt and corsage,
For her that you love so well.

For Mother in lowly cabin,
Or Mother in palace hall,
Is ever the truest and dearest,
And ever the best of all.
In travail and pain she bore us,
In laughter and love she nursed,
And who that would shame the Mother
Is of all mankind accursed.

Tired and wan too often,
Weary and weak at times,
But always full of the courage
That thrills when the future chimes,
Mother with hands toil-hardened,
Mother in pearls and lace,
The light of heavenly beauty Shines in her tender face.

So here's to the white carnation,
Wear it on Mothers' day;
Flower that blooms for Mother,
Winsome, gallant and gay.
Flower of perfect sweetness,
Flower for hut and hall,
Here's to the white carnation,
And to Mother—Our Best of All.

FLORIST.....

CONVENTIONAL DESIGNING.

Its Adaptability to Decorating.

The most general meaning given to conventional designing, as regards floral art, was discussed in a former article and was found to be the common or customary method of executing designs; it was also stated that the word conventional may be applied to the set design itself. The three methods more or less conventional at the present time—the so-called loose style, the solid style and the foliage background—were considered.

This discussion led up to a question as to whether the second meaning of the term conventional has any application to floral designing. The sense of the derived application is this: A removal from close representation of nature by a system of rejecting and selecting—what? Lines. It is a process of analyzing and separating the form of the flower into the lines which unite to make its outline, adapting these lines and reproducing therefrom a shape which retains the characteristics of the pattern flower, is enough like it to be recognized, but still is not an exact reproduction.

The Fleur-de-lis as an Example.

A familiar illustration is seen in the conventional fleur-de-lis, common in jewelry, wall paper, embroidery and book-cover designs. A little study of this conventional fleur-de-lis will show that a new figure is created, resembling the original, but more adapted to ornamental uses. The separated lines are brought together, retaining the principal ones and leaving out the less important. Compare the two—the iris flower with the conventional fleur-de-lis—and you will find that the flat picture is the skeleton of the flower; yes, more; it is the spirit of it. It has stripped the flower of its deceptive high lights and color body, with the supporting stem, and revealed the simplicity and clearness of its one set of lines, of its own idea.

But where and how does all this apply to floral designing? Possibly more indirectly than directly—by influencing one's style; by teaching an observer how to make and combine lines, to trace them as they grow from a common source; their sweep, the fine sense of proportion in the completed figure.

The Architectural Festoon.

For another example of conventionalized design, hunt out a festoon or garland as used in architectural ornament or frescoing. Here is a design which can be drafted bodily for wall decorations, either as a single drape or as a decoration continued around the room. It may be elaborated by the addition of wreaths, ties, baskets, balls or other decorative features, to suit the occasion—for Christmas, immortelle balls or bells or wreaths; for a wedding, baskets of flowers, or bells. Use but one kind of the objects in one decoration, placing them at regular intervals; that is, a wreath may be placed in the center of the space above each drape; or, if the basket feature is to be used, hang a basket from the supporting point of each festoon.

Following the Classic Outlines.

Study the proportions of the classic festoon carefully. Notice, for instance, the length of the drape as regards the depth. If green is the decorative material employed, see that the heavy and light parts, if there are such, come at the same point in each drape. If the festooning is made of flowers, they should be of uniform size and placed at regular intervals. Make each festoon the exact reproduction of the others as to weight, depth and length.

You should also know what kind of room to put such a design in. Well, then, what kind?

Does conventional designing do away with originality in floral decorating? In other departments of ornamental art it is considered the highest type of

A LOS ANGELES STORE.

J. W. Wolters, of Los Angeles, Cal., has long been well and favorably known to the trade as a progressive retailer and at his store on Fourth street, the Angelus, the most up-to-date methods always have been employed. The store shown in the accompanying illustration is a new one, situated at 627 South Hill street, and no expense has been spared to make it one of the finest and most artistic in the country. The walls and ceiling are old gold, the woodwork being finished in mission style, while a large number of pieces of valuable statuary, hammered brass, alabaster ware and other costly furnishings have been added. Since the photograph was taken a number of choice large palms have been received from an eastern grower, the specimens here shown being from a local firm. At the rear are rooms for the reception of visitors, and a rest room. While every convenience for customers is provided, there also are ample facilities for carrying on the work, and a light, roomy office. A rear entrance prevents anything having to be brought in through the store and altogether it can not fail to raise the tone of the trade in the city.

BLACKISTONE'S BOUQUETS.

The wedding bouquets shown on page 15 were some of those made by Z. D. Blackistone, Washington, D. C., for a wedding April 24, the bridal party being the largest Mr. Blackistone ever has seen. It consisted of twenty-four persons. The bride carried a shower bouquet of orchids, lilies of the valley and orange blossoms. The ten bridesmaids carried shower bouquets of sweet peas, ranging in shades from white to cerise pink. The two flower quantity of dogwood and white lilac, were used for the two decorations.

THE WREATH.

Some of Its Popular Forms.

Until a few years ago the wreath was the most popular of all funeral designs, but the advent of the spray or bunch of flowers has made a considerable difference in its popularity.

It will generally be admitted that the usual circular wreath, of the same size all around, was not particularly beautiful or artistic, though there were many exceptions to this rule. Even now a good deal of this class of work that is sent out leaves much to be desired. There are many forms of the wreath still used, some elaborate, others quite simple, and it is hoped that, in mentioning a few of the most successful of these, a hint or two may be given that will be useful to beginners in their work.

Groundwork of White Carnations.

A type of wreath that is extremely satisfactory as a show window design is made solid with white carnations, one half being thickened out into a kind of broad crescent. On this part of the wreath a spray of flowers is fastened and there is room for a number of changes to be carried out on the same foundation, thus giving a good variety with only a small outlay.

Roses, for instance, may be used one day, brought high in the center of the crescent and gradually becoming smaller until they run out to a single flower or spray above the center of the wreath on each side. This sounds like a stiff arrangement, but, if properly carried out, it is far from that, and is quite effective. Any other flower in season, excepting white, could be used in a similar way, and the groundwork of carnations will last for a week or more if fresh when made up.

Magnolia Leaves and Other Foliage.

Simple yet telling wreaths are often made on a somewhat similar plan as the foregoing, but with magnolia leaves instead of carnations. The magnolia leaves are wired singly and are closely placed over the foundation of the wreath. Here the decorator has a chance to introduce various other kinds of foliage, such as croton or pandanus leaves, small palms of such species as the cocos or geonoma, or the prepared fronds of Cycas revoluta. Large bunches of purple violets, Easter lilies, gladioli and other large flowers may also be used here with striking and good effect, especially in the larger sized wreaths. There is room here, too, for bold display in the properly selected broad ribbons, in green, red or violet shades. Try them out, and it is a hundred to one that some really beautiful and striking combinations will be discovered, as it were, accidentally.

Making Every Flower Tell.

Returning to the smaller, cheaper wreaths, it is astonishing how little stock a good decorator will use and yet get satisfactory results. Too often the beginner in wreath making sticks his flowers in quite indiscriminately. He has no idea, or only a vague one, as to how much stock he is going to use or what the wreath will look like when he gets through, but just trusts to luck, and, if he has a few flowers left—well, in they go for luck too. The result is a crowded mass of flowers, a poor effect from a large quantity of stock.

The experienced wreath maker, on the other hand, will use far fewer flowers, but will make every one tell. Each bloom stands out by itself and can be seen, while, with the addition here and there of a little adiantum or some other green, a perfect wreath results, with little expenditure for stock.

Natural and Acquired Skill.

Perhaps there is no other phase of work so difficult to give advice upon as the arrangement of flowers. So much lies in aptitude for the work, skill in color and form blending, and a knowledge of what is fitting in various circumstances. Some men never get the knack of it; with others it comes natural, but all will find that the best results follow when every flower and every leaf shows distinctly. A blur of colors is not a picture, and a mass of flowers without any form or shape is not good work.

Each man must study and experiment for himself and be always on the lookout for newer and more striking ideas than he has been following. Only in this way can continued artistic success be expected in wreath making, as in any other branch of the florists' work.

ANOTHER SWINDLE.

In New York a young man has been arrested on a charge of grand larceny made by John Changuris, of the firm of Changuris Bros., florists at 980 Sixth avenue. It is charged that he obtained flowers from Changuris by representing himself over the telephone as one of the florists' regular customers. It is alleged by Changuris that April 3 some one called up his place on the telephone, gave the name of the customer and desired to have a bunch of roses sent to the Savoy theater. The flowers were delivered there by a messenger boy. This same procedure was followed, according to Changuris, April 6 and April 18. At the conclusion of this last delivery the bill was nearly $70 and Changuris became suspicious. The messenger boy described the man to whom he had delivered the flowers. It was not the customer. When the same kind of a telephone message was next received Mr. Changuris went to the theater with the messenger boy and caused the arrest of the man who was waiting to receive the flowers.

During the last half semester four students in floriculture at the University of Illinois have been taking the course in floral decoration. The object of this course is to give the students a knowledge of decorative materials and their uses. The lectures of the course how to make and combine lines, to trace them as they grow from a common source; their sweep, the fine sense of proportion in the completed figure.

The Architectural Festoon.

For another example of conventionalized design, hunt out a festoon or garland as used in architectural ornament or frescoing. Here is a design which can be drafted bodily for wall decorations, either as a single drape or as a decoration continued around the room. It may be elaborated by the addition of wreaths, ties, baskets, balls or other decorative features, to suit the occasion—for Christmas, immortelle balls or bells or wreaths; for a wedding, baskets of flowers, or bells. Use but one kind of the objects in one decoration, placing them at regular intervals; that is, a wreath may be placed in the center of the space above each drape; or, if the basket feature is to be used, hang a basket from the supporting point of each festoon.

Following the Classic Outlines.

Study the proportions of the classic festoon carefully. Notice, for instance, the length of the drape as regards the depth. If green is the decorative material employed, see that the heavy and light parts, if there are such, come at the same point in each drape. If the festooning is made of flowers, they should be of uniform size and placed at regular intervals. Make each festoon the exact reproduction of the others as to weight, depth and length.

You should also know what kind of room to put such a design in. Well, then, what kind?

Does conventional designing do away with originality in floral decorating? In other departments of ornamental art it is considered the highest type of

A LOS ANGELES STORE.

J. W. Wolters, of Los Angeles, Cal., has long been well and favorably known to the trade as a progressive retailer and at his store on Fourth street, the Angelus, the most up-to-date methods always have been employed. The store shown in the accompanying illustration is a new one, situated at 627 South Hill street, and no expense has been spared to make it one of the finest and most artistic in the country. The walls and ceiling are old gold, the woodwork being finished in mission style, while a large number of pieces of valuable statuary, hammered brass, alabaster ware and other costly furnishings have been added. Since the photograph was taken a number of choice large palms have been received from an eastern grower, the specimens here shown being from a local firm. At the rear are rooms for the reception of visitors, and a rest room. While every convenience for customers is provided, there also are ample facilities for carrying on the work, and a light, roomy office. A rear entrance prevents anything having to be brought in through the store and altogether it can not fail to raise the tone of the trade in the city.

FLORAL WORK AT THE U. OF I.

During the last half semester four students in floriculture at the University of Illinois have been taking the course in floral decoration. The object of this course is to give the students a knowledge of decorative materials and their uses. The lectures of the course covered such subjects as decorative materials, accessory materials, studies in arrangements and such other points as are of interest to the decorator. The laboratory work consisted in the preparation of designs, sprays, baskets and other floral arrangements. The course was completed April 4.

Early in February the class made a trip to Lafayette, Ind., to study the details of the new workshop of the F. Dorner & Sons Co. Before the close of the course it was decided that an exhibition of decorative work should be held April 20 in the auditorium of the university. Miss Emily Dorner, of Lafayette, took part in the exhibition and assisted the students in the preparation of the various floral arrangements. About 1,200 university and town people attended the exhibition. Each visitor was presented with a flower as a souvenir.

The various exhibits were numbered and catalogued as are the paintings at an art exhibition. The catalogue was neatly printed in the form of a program and gave a description of the flowers used in each of the thirty pieces exhibited. The affair was a great success in every way and did much credit to the instructor and the class, who were M. R. Bebb, H. B. Henley, R. M. Henley and W. K. Palmer. Three of the pieces were photographed for The Review and are shown on pages 12 and 13.

SEEDLING PERENNIALS.

Perennials of all kinds which were started under glass in February or early March can be planted outdoors at once. Choose a cloudy day for setting them out. They are all much better in nursery rows left sufficiently far apart to allow of ample cultivation. Some varieties, such as delphiniums, will need more space than, for instance, the weaker growing aquilegias. All like well enriched soil, and, if kept well stirred among, will make strong stock for fall sales. Quite a few of these early started perennials will flower the first year, and you can hardly work up too big a stock of the leading varieties, as the call for them steadily increases.

ROOTED RUNNERS PREFERABLE.

In the propagation of violets, can as good results be obtained from separations as from rooted runners? I would be glad to know the experience of other growers.

H. A. M.

Rooted runners are preferable to divisions. In his monograph on the violet, published serially in The Review, B. T. Galloway said: "It is highly important that the grower begin with good stock. Every year from February to the middle of summer the advertisers in The Review offer violet stock for sale. Rooted runners are offered all the way from $5 to $10 per thousand. Our preference has always been for good, strong, sand-rooted runners, which should be ready to take from the bench by the middle of March. In many cases the growers wait until after the main Easter picking is over and then advertise stock for sale. This stock is for the most part divided crowns, which are not as good as sand-rooted runners put in earlier. It is better to pay $10 per thousand for good sand-rooted runners than $5 for indifferent divided crowns.

"The stock secured, it may be either potted off into 2-inch pots and placed in coldframes, where plenty of air and water can be given, or in flats. Our preference has always been for flats, for the reason that the plants do not seem to dry out so readily, and make a better root growth. We use flats fifteen inches wide, two feet long and two and one-half inches deep, and put about seventy-five to 100 plants to the flat. Plants will stand in these flats until planting time, the middle or last of April. The young stock will have to be watched carefully, and in addition to keeping them well watered, care should be exercised in the matter of syringing for the purpose of keeping off red spider. A thorough syringing once a day will prevent this pest, taking care to do this work always early in the morning, so that the plants will dry off before night."

LARGE VIOLETS.

Please tell me if our violets are extra size? We have lots of them that are one and one-quarter inches one way and one and three-quarter inches the other. They look more like pansies. They have stems twelve inches long. People who come here say they never have seen anything like them.

J. A. L.

Your violets are certainly of extra fine quality; 12-inch stems are a sure index that your soil and mode of cul-

MEXICAN IVY.

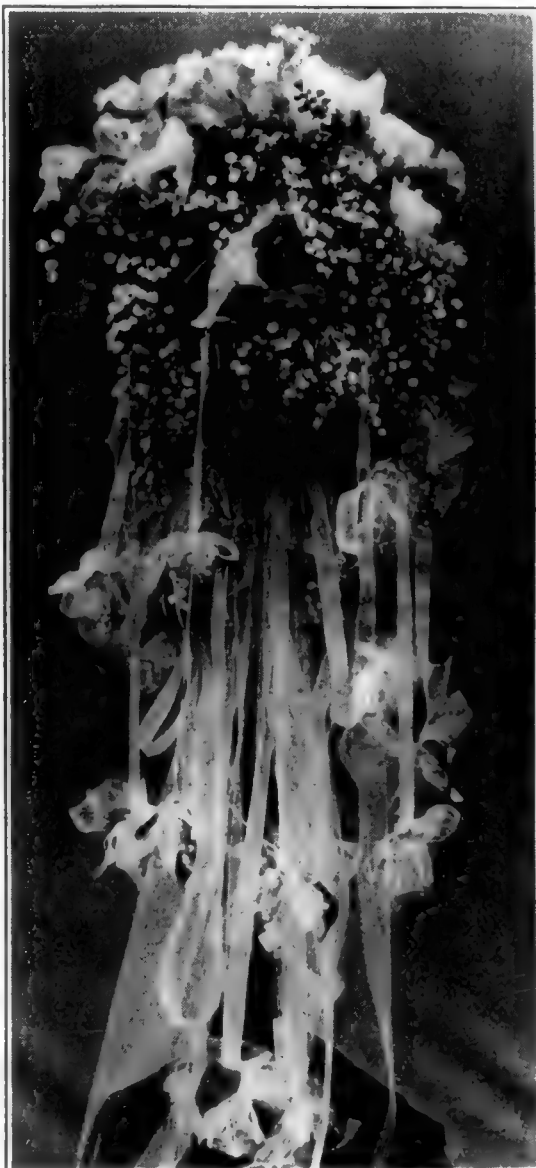

I shall be pleased to see in The Review a note on the so-called Mexican ivy, together with its botanical name and any facts about its manner of growth, habitat, etc.

P. B.

The Mexican ivy got its trade name from the first handler in wholesale markets—he recognized it as a good new green for retail florists and, probably not knowing its real name, gave it a title that would not put his competitors on the trail to the actual source of supply. Botanically, Mexican ivy is Vancouveria.

Bailey's cyclopedia says that Vancouveria is named after Capt. George Vancouver, commander of the Discovery on the historical voyage to the northwest coast in 1791-95. Vancouveria is described as a genus of three species of low, hardy perennial herbs native to the Pacific slope, from central California north to British Columbia. They are shade-loving plants, with slender, creeping rootstocks and radical, two to three ternately compound leaves, somewhat like maidenhair or rue, and rather small white or yellow flowers in an open panicle on a naked scape. Vancouverias are not showy plants, but have foliage of an elegant and refined type.

The leaves submitted for identification appear to be from Vancouveria, formerly known as Epimedium, hexandra, or V. chrysantha, native to the Pacific Coast range mountains from central California northwards to Oregon. It is a moisture-loving herbaceous plant allied to berberis, and is locally known both as flowering fern and inside-out flower. Both V. hexandra and V. chrysantha occur in shady forests near Santa Cruz, Cal., and are not easy to distinguish apart from the foliage alone, though chrysantha generally has rounder leaflets. It is likely foliage of both species is collected for the florists' trade.

W. Van Fleet.

The botanical name of the sample of leaves sent us is Vancouveria parviflora. The common name is Mexican ivy or ivy maidenhair. It belongs to the barberry family, and is sometimes called American barrenwort. There are one or two other species found on the Pacific coast. This one, however, is the stiffest and most compact growing and has become quite a feature in the green goods department of the trade.

WALLS OF CONCRETE BLOCKS.

I noticed in The Review of April 18 an inquiry concerning the use of concrete blocks in greenhouse construction. The inquiry is signed J. G., and reads as follows: "Will some reader of The Review please give his experience with concrete blocks used in greenhouse walls? Does the frost come through and freeze the plants next to the concrete wall, in a temperature of 40 or 45 degrees at night? Any information regarding this will be greatly appreciated. My location is southern Michigan."

Now, our experience with that sort of greenhouse wall, here in the rigorous climate of Waterloo, Province of Quebec, ought to be of use to J. G. We are using an 8-inch hollow block wall in all our construction, and find it far ahead of anything else. We have found from actual experience that it will stand a full week, with an average night temperature of 15 degrees below zero, without frosting on the inside, whereas a solid wall will frost through the second night. I do not think that J. G. would have any trouble at all with freezing of his plants under the conditions he mentions, as long as they do not actually touch the wall.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Gloxinias.

The earliest batch of gloxinia plants should now be coming into flower. Give them a warm house and a moderate amount of shade. If too much shade is used the foliage will be of a fine dark green color, but the flower stems will be weak and floppy. Avoid spraying the foliage or you will soon disfigure it. Just as soon as the sun strikes any damp leaves, they will be badly burned and, if the foliage is once scorched, the plants are practically unsalable. Where a batch of these showy plants is wanted for flowering in August, the dormant tubers should be started now. These will do well from this time on in an ordinary greenhouse, always taking care that the sun is not allowed to scorch the leaves. Seedlings started last February are now in 3-inch pots and almost ready for a shift. These, if kept growing on, will make useful stock for flowering in July and August. Gloxinias should not be too firmly potted and the compost at the final shift should be light but rich, with a good proportion of sand added.

Fancy Caladiums.

Those attractive plants, the fancy-leaved caladiums, are particularly valuable for bedding in the warmer states, but, while they will make a fair amount of growth as far north as Boston and Chicago, they cannot be depended upon as bedding plants. For pot culture they are, however, extremely useful. They are at their best at the hottest part of the year, at which time really good flowering plants are not plentiful, and for room decoration, also on piazzas which are not too exposed, the fancy-leaved caladiums come in usefully. They enjoy a warm, moist house to make their growth in and, while they like a little shade under glass, it should be light or the naturally rich colors of the leaves will be dulled. For compost, they grow well in fibrous loam, decayed cow manure, leaf-mold and sand. They also grow finely if some fern fiber is mixed in the soil; it helps to keep it porous at the same time. Liquid manure once a week can be given as soon as the plants are well rooted around the pots.

There are many beautiful varieties of fancy-leaved caladiums and as they are of easy culture, no florist need be afraid to try them. Many fail to carry the roots over winter successfully. To keep them properly, they need a temperature of not less than 60 degrees.

Bay Trees.

After the first week in May it is always safe to stand bay trees outside. They may get an occasional light frost after that date, but it will not hurt them. Exposure to strong light will probably turn the leaves brown on some plants and, to prevent this, they should be freely hosed overhead and sufficient moisture must be applied at the root. Plants badly pot or tub bound should have a shift, but in most cases if a good top-dressing is given it will suffice, supplementing this with liquid manure from time to time throughout the growing season. Plants which have become quite brown should be carefully sheared back; they will soon make new growths and make presentable heads. In addition to bay trees, such evergreens as aucubas, cypressus, box trees, Araucaria imbricata, English and Irish yews and others which do not winter in the colder states, should be placed outdoors at once. Give them an abundant water supply and hose overhead freely and they will soon start away into active growth.

Amaryllises.

The flowering season for amaryllises will now be over, but if a fine crop of spikes is desired next winter and spring they must have the best of attention through the summer. If space permits they will do well in a greenhouse, especially if they can be plunged. On the whole, however, the best plan is to plunge them in coldframes and leave sash protection over them all summer, shading a little from direct sunlight. Leave the sashes tilted up, both top and bottom, all the time and give the plants a hosing over every afternoon, or if, perchance, the day is unusually hot, two or three sprayings will be appreciated. When plunged to the brims in old manure or leaves, the plants will not require frequent waterings, even in the hottest weather, and then plunged plants always produce much bigger bulbs than the unplunged ones. Keep seedling plants potted on as they need it. They will make quite large bulbs in one season if carefully looked after, and a large proportion will flower the second year.

Asters.

Early asters, such as Early Wonder and Queen of the Market, should now be gradually hardened off, and planting out can be done from the early part to the end of May, according to the latitude. A light freeze will not harm them. Of course ground well enriched is necessary for a fine crop of flowers. It is a pure waste of time to plant in poorly prepared ground. Nine to twelve inches apart in the rows, with the rows twenty-four inches apart, will suffice for these early varieties. The late batches are better allowed thirty to thirty-six inches between the rows. Now is a suitable time to make a good sowing of such varieties as Crego, Vick's Branching, the Ostrich Plume varieties and Semple's for late flowering. A coldframe answers well for sowing now and is preferable to sowing outdoors, as watering can be attended to regularly and a larger percentage of germination ensured. Keep the sashes on until the seedlings are above ground; then remove them entirely unless perchance a cold snap should make it necessary to cover them. These seedlings raised in the open are not subject to the various stem diseases which attack those started in heat.

OUTDOOR PEAS.

The early outdoor sowings of sweet peas are now above ground and the soil should be kept well stirred about them. Get supports in position as soon as possible, whether it be brush or wire netting. Stand some short, bushy twigs among the little seedlings for them to cling to. No doubt many of them have come up too thickly and should be thinned, leaving the plants three or four inches apart each way. A thick row of sweet peas makes a brave show of green, but it will never give nearly as fine flower spikes as those well thinned out and, furthermore, there is always likely to be a large number dying off during the season, something less seldom seen where plants are judiciously thinned. If any more sweet peas are to be sown, get them in at once. If delayed any more, the flowers will be of poor quality, as the growth will be forced with few roots to support them. The plants started in pots should go out at once. If they get the least potbound it is better to loosen the balls somewhat when planting them out.

TEMPERATURE FOR SWEET PEAS.

In my paper on sweet peas, entitled "A Grower's Notes," which was published in The Review of April 25, page 14, I notice a mistake, by correcting which you will greatly oblige me. This mistake was probably made in copying my manuscript on the typewriter, before sending the copy to The Review, and is in regard to temperature.

During midwinter we run a night temperature of 50 degrees, with a temperature of 55 degrees on cloudy days and 60 to 65 degrees during bright, clear weather. Toward spring we drop to 45 or 47 degrees at night, with the same day temperature as during midwinter. I shall be grateful to you if you will make this correction.

WHAT TO GROW.

I wish to have your valuable advice as to what to grow in the following: I have four greenhouses, heated by hot water, sizes as follows: Small greenhouse, 10 x 38; center greenhouse, 20 x 75; north house, 29 x 75, and west house, 34 x 35. The small house faces the south, then the center house, and the north. These houses run east and west. The west house is almost square. This is new business for me, but I am fond of the work. One of my greenhouses is well adapted for violets and geraniums. In addition to the greenhouses I have a 3-acre farm which adjoins same, which is good sandy loam. I want to use two-thirds of this for vegetables and the remainder for whatever you might suggest. The farm is arranged under the Skinner system. I also have 400 hotbed sashes. What would you advise growing in them?

E. S.

You do not state what convenient markets you have, but presuming that you have one locally which can consume anything you may produce, you would do well to restrict yourself to one or two crops. Violets would be a good crop to grow. Princess of Wales, single, and Lady Hume Campbell, double, are the best varieties. If you decide to grow the doubles, plant a fair number of singles to provide sufficient leaves for bunching. Single violets are over by the end of March, and doubles a month later. You could, if you wish, plant chrysanthemums to follow them, in which case it would be necessary for you to reserve one house for mum stock and propagating the same. Cuttings for single stems should go in during May or the early part of June. If you grow early mums, or even midseason ones, you could clean them out in time for single violets, which are benefited by one or two freezings before housing.

If, in lieu of chrysanthemums, you preferred some vegetable crop to follow violets you could bring along tomatoes in pots and have these of good size to plant in as soon as the violets were pulled out, of course manuring the beds liberally first. Use such tomatoes as Comet, Lister's Prolific or Best of All for this purpose. Cucumbers are another vegetable crop you could grow, but tomatoes you would find of easier culture. The former require a warm, moist atmosphere, the latter a warm, dry and more airy house.

Your hotbed sashes could be utilized, if desired, for single violets, which would give a heavy spring crop, or they could be devoted to lettuce, radishes, early beets, or such other vegetables as your local market calls for.

If you preferred to grow geraniums or other bedding plants, your houses would be suitable for their culture, and the coldframes would make it possible for you to grow an immense quantity of asters and other annuals if desired. On the ground outdoors sweet peas, asters and gladioli are the three flowers for which you would find the greatest call. With the Skinner system in operation you should be able to produce excellent crops of any of these.

Single violets want an average night temperature of 40 degrees in winter; double violets, 45 degrees. Geraniums do well at 45 to 50 degrees. If such bedding plants as coleus and alternanthera are grown, 60 degrees is necessary. Tomatoes want 60 degrees at night and cucumbers 5 degrees higher for best results.

Murphysboro, Ill.—April 26 Claude Wisley suffered a small loss of glass by hail, some 300 panes of glass out of some 35,000 square feet of glass being broken. It seemed to hail in streaks, the downtown plant suffering the most, while the new plant just completed a mile from town escaped with eighty-two broken lights.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Gloxinias.

The earliest batch of gloxinia plants should now be coming into flower. Give them a warm house and a moderate amount of shade. If too much shade is used the foliage will be of a fine dark green color, but the flower stems will be weak and floppy. Avoid spraying the foliage or you will soon disfigure it. Just as soon as the sun strikes any damp leaves, they will be badly burned and, if the foliage is once scorched, the plants are practically unsalable. Where a batch of these showy plants is wanted for flowering in August, the dormant tubers should be started now. These will do well from this time on in an ordinary greenhouse, always taking care that the sun is not allowed to scorch the leaves. Seedlings started last February are now in 3-inch pots and almost ready for a shift. These, if kept growing on, will make useful stock for flowering in July and August. Gloxinias should not be too firmly potted and the compost at the final shift should be light but rich, with a good proportion of sand added.

Fancy Caladiums.

Those attractive plants, the fancy leaved caladiums, are particularly valuable for bedding in the warmer states, but, while they will make a fair amount of growth as far north as Boston and Chicago, they cannot be depended upon as bedding plants. For pot culture they are, however, extremely useful. They are at their best at the hottest part of the year, at which time really good flowering plants are not plentiful, and for room decoration, also on piazzas which are not too exposed, the fancy-leaved caladiums come in usefully. They enjoy a warm, moist house to make their growth in and, while they like a little shade under glass, it should be light or the naturally rich colors of the leaves will be dulled. For compost, they grow well in fibrous loam, decayed cow manure, leaf-mold and sand. They also grow finely if some fern fiber is mixed in the soil; it helps to keep it porous at the same time. Liquid manure once a week can be given as soon as the plants are well rooted around the pots.

There are many beautiful varieties of fancy-leaved caladiums and as they are of easy culture, no florist need be afraid to try them. Many fail to carry the roots over winter successfully. To keep them properly, they need a temperature of not less than 60 degrees.

Bay Trees.

After the first week in May it is always safe to stand bay trees outside. They may get an occasional light frost after that date, but it will not hurt them. Exposure to strong light will probably turn the leaves brown on some plants and, to prevent this, they should be freely hosed overhead and sufficient moisture must be applied at the root. Plants badly pot or tub bound should have a shift, but in most cases if a good top-dressing is given it will suffice, supplementing this with liquid manure from time to time throughout the growing season. Plants which have become quite brown should be carefully sheared back; they will soon make new growths and make presentable heads. In addition to bay trees, such evergreens as aucubas, cypressus, box trees, Araucaria imbricata, English and Irish yews and others which do not winter in the colder states, should be placed outdoors at once. Give them an abundant water supply and hose overhead freely and they will soon start away into active growth.

Amaryllises.

The flowering season for amaryllises will now be over, but if a fine crop of spikes is desired next winter and spring they must have the best of attention through the summer. If space permits they will do well in a greenhouse, especially if they can be plunged. On the whole, however, the best plan is to plunge them in coldframes and leave sash protection over them all summer, shading a little from direct sunlight. Leave the sashes tilted up, both top and bottom, all the time and give the plants a hosing over every afternoon, or if, perchance, the day is unusually hot, two or three sprayings will be appreciated. When plunged to the brims in old manure or leaves, the plants will not require frequent waterings, even in the hottest weather, and then plunged plants always produce much bigger bulbs than the unplunged ones. Keep seedling plants potted on as they need it. They will make quite large bulbs in one season if carefully looked after, and a large proportion will flower the second year.

Asters.

Early asters, such as Early Wonder and Queen of the Market, should now be gradually hardened off, and planting out can be done from the early part to the end of May, according to the latitude. A light freeze will not harm them. Of course ground well enriched is necessary for a fine crop of flowers. It is a pure waste of time to plant in poorly prepared ground. Nine to twelve inches apart in the rows, with the rows twenty-four inches apart, will suffice for these early varieties. The late batches are better allowed thirty to thirty-six inches between the rows. Now is a suitable time to make a good sowing of such varieties as Crego, Vick's Branching, the Ostrich Plume varieties and Semple's for late flowering. A coldframe answers well for sowing now and is preferable to sowing outdoors, as watering can be attended to regularly and a larger percentage of germination ensured. Keep the sashes on until the seedlings are above ground; then remove them entirely unless perchance a cold snap should make it necessary to cover them. These seedlings raised in the open are not subject to the various stem diseases which attack those started in heat.

OUTDOOR PEAS.

The early outdoor sowings of sweet peas are now above ground and the soil should be kept well stirred about them. Get supports in position as soon as possible, whether it be brush or wire netting. Stand some short, bushy twigs among the little seedlings for them to cling to. No doubt many of them have come up too thickly and should be thinned, leaving the plants three or four inches apart each way. A thick row of sweet peas makes a brave show of green, but it will never give nearly as fine flower spikes as those well thinned out and, furthermore, there is always likely to be a large number dying off during the season, something less seldom seen where plants are judiciously thinned. If any more sweet peas are to be sown, get them in at once. If delayed any more, the flowers will be of poor quality, as the growth will be forced with few roots to support them. The plants started in pots should go out at once. If they get the least potbound it is better to loosen the balls somewhat when planting them out.

TEMPERATURE FOR SWEET PEAS.

In my paper on sweet peas, entitled "A Grower's Notes," which was published in The Review of April 25, page 14, I notice a mistake, by correcting which you will greatly oblige me. This mistake was probably made in copying my manuscript on the typewriter, before sending the copy to The Review, and is in regard to temperature.

During midwinter we run a night temperature of 50 degrees, with a temperature of 55 degrees on cloudy days and 60 to 65 degrees during bright, clear weather. Toward spring we drop to 45 or 47 degrees at night, with the same day temperature as during midwinter. I shall be grateful to you if you will make this correction.

WHAT TO GROW.

I wish to have your valuable advice as to what to grow in the following: I have four greenhouses, heated by hot water, sizes as follows: Small greenhouse, 10 x 38; center greenhouse, 20 x 50; north house, 29 x 75, and west house, 34 x 35. The small house faces the south, then the center house, and the north. These houses run east and west. The west house is almost square. This is new business for me, but I am up to the work. One of my greenhouses is well adapted for violets and geraniums. In addition to the greenhouses I have a 3-acre farm which joins same, which is good sandy loam. I want to use two-thirds of this for vegetables and the remainder for whatever you might suggest. The farm is arranged under the Skinner system. I also have 400 hotbed sashes. What do you advise growing in them?

E. S.

You do not state what convenient markets you have, but presuming that you have one locally which can consume anything you may produce, you could do well to restrict yourself to one or two crops. Violets would be a good crop to grow. Princess of Wales, single, and Lady Hume Campbell, double, are the best varieties. If you decide to grow the doubles, plant a fair number of singles to provide sufficient leaves for bunching. Single violets are over by the end of March, and doubles a month later. You could, if you wish, plant chrysanthemums to follow them, in which case it would be necessary for you to reserve one house for mum stock and propagating the same. Cuttings for single stems should go in during May or the early part of June. If you grow early mums, or even midseason ones, you could clean them out in time for single violets, which are benefited by one or two freezings before housing.

If, in lieu of chrysanthemums, you preferred some vegetable crop to follow violets you could bring along tomatoes in pots and have these of good size to plant in as soon as the violets were pulled out, of course manuring the beds liberally first. Use such tomatoes as Comet, Lister's Prolific or Best of All for this purpose. Cucumbers are another vegetable crop you could grow, but tomatoes you would find of easier culture. The former require a warm, moist atmosphere, the latter a warm, dry and more airy house.

Your hotbed sashes could be utilized, if desired, for single violets, which would give a heavy spring crop, or they could be devoted to lettuce, radishes, early beets, or such other vegetables as your local market calls for.

If you preferred to grow geraniums or other bedding plants, your houses would be suitable for their culture, and the coldframes would make it possible for you to grow an immense quantity of asters and other annuals if desired. On the ground outdoors sweet peas, asters and gladioli are the three flowers for which you would find the greatest call. With the Skinner system in operation you should be able to produce excellent crops of any of these.

Single violets want an average night temperature of 40 degrees in winter; double violets, 45 degrees. Geraniums do well at 45 to 50 degrees. If such bedding plants as coleus and alternanthera are grown, 60 degrees is necessary. Tomatoes want 60 degrees at night and cucumbers 5 degrees higher for best results.

CEMETERY

BEDDING

GRAVE PLANTING.

A Seasonable Topic.

"In the spring," says the poet, "a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love." Perhaps so, but in the spring a florist's fancy must be turned, lightly or otherwise, to many other subjects, including bedding work. With the bedding season just at hand in the middle west, and with the work in various stages of advancement in different parts of this vast country, the theme demands attention. And a large share of this attention must be given to cemetery bedding, since the homes of the dead are even more numerous than those of the living, and the assistance of florists and gardeners is everywhere more or less required in making the lowly resting places beautiful. A few suggestions, therefore, from a specialist in cemetery bedding may be acceptable to many florists, especially to any who are not experienced in that sort of work and whose services may be unexpectedly called for.

Photographed for The Review.

The suggestions are here given in the form of pictures of some specimens of the work of John Fruetz, one of the gardeners at Rosehill cemetery, Chicago. The photographs were taken for The Review last summer. Four of the pictures are presented. Mr. Fruetz's training in this line began nine years ago, when he secured his position in the cemetery force. Each succeeding year his share of responsibility in the designing and planting has increased, until last season, when, at the age of only 23 years, he had entire charge of the work.

Effective Use of Foliage Plants.

It is the carpet bedding, rather than any other style of planting, that has attracted attention at Rosehill, and it is carpet bedding, therefore, that is here illustrated. It is true that some of the dwarf-growing foliage plants which are essential in carpet work are rather expensive—too expensive, perhaps, for a good many pocketbooks. But, on the other hand, these trim and tiny plants are particularly suitable for the small spaces that are generally to be covered in cemetery work, and there are many customers who will gladly pay for all the needed stock when they see what can be accomplished with it.

The bedding designs at Rosehill are characterized, as artistic and effective designs generally are, by clearness and simplicity rather than elaborateness. Yet, though not involved and intricate, the bedding includes all such details as will distinctly add to the beauty, completeness or realism of the design. This effective use of minute details is especially well exemplified in the harp design that is here described and illustrated.

The Few Favorite Varieties.

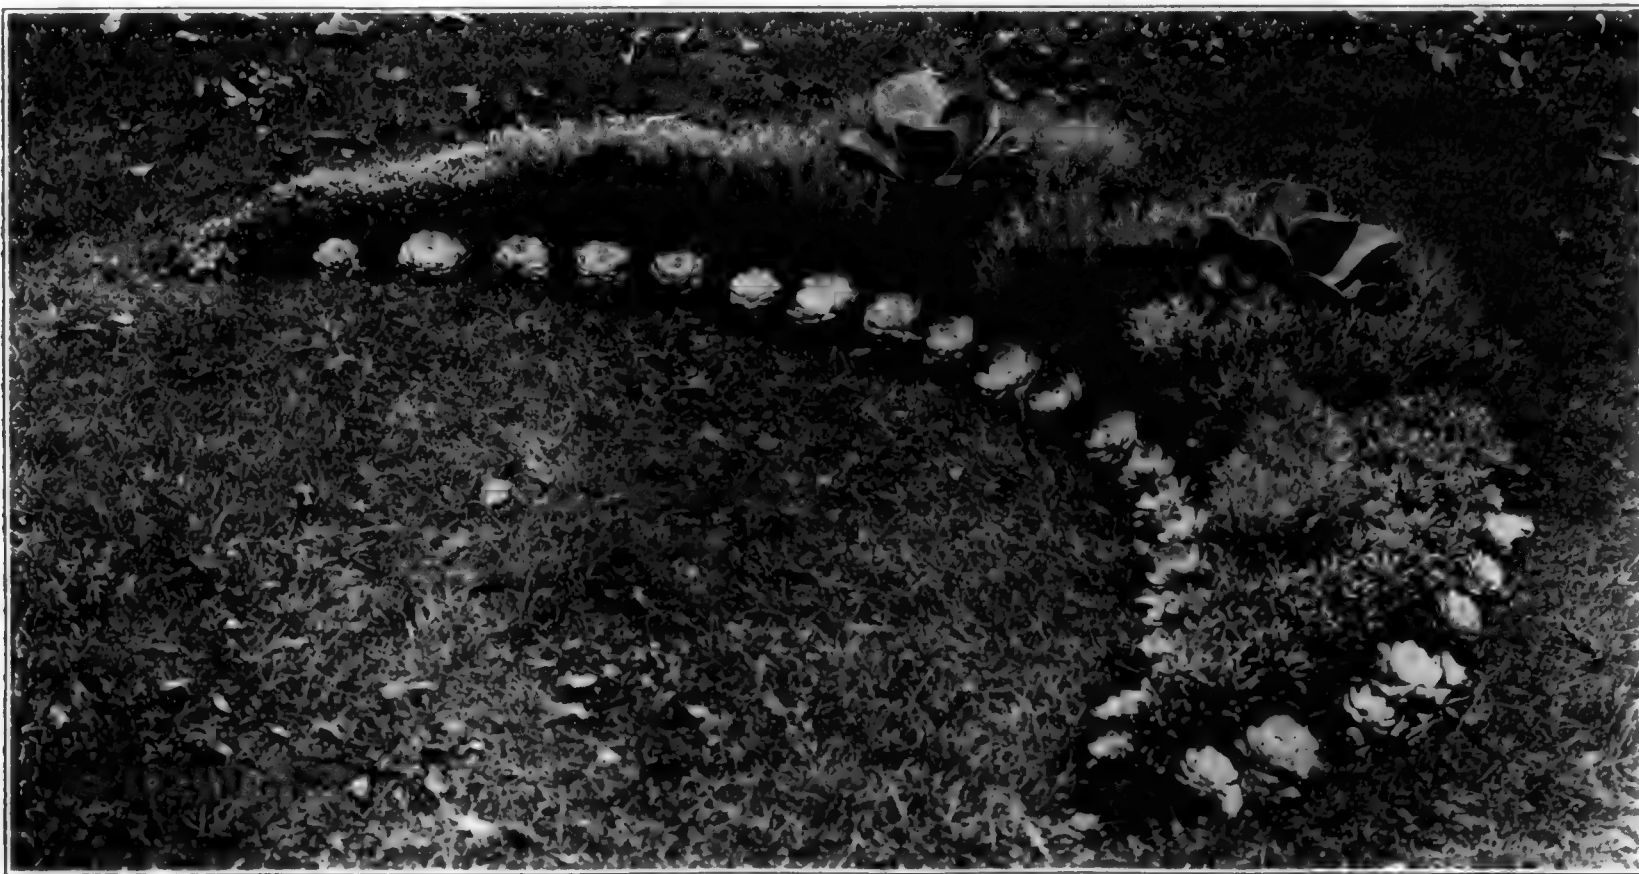

One of the most noticeable features of the Rosehill grave planting is the comparatively small number of varieties of plants that are used. The same few familiar sorts appear again and again in the different beds, but in combinations so various as to preclude all danger of monotony. Alternantheras are the main dependence, of course; carpet bedding in America without alternantheras would be almost unimaginable. Alternantheras are used in three colors, with a greater or less admixture of santolina and a conspicuous use of echeveria, or hen and chickens, especially in the borders.

In referring to red alternantheras in the following descriptions of the sample beds, the botanical name of the red variety is not mentioned; neither is the exact shade of red indicated. The reds chiefly used at Rosehill are Alternanthera paronychioides major and Alternanthera brilliantissima. The so-called yellow alternantheras are Alternanthera aurea nana, the color of which, as the reader knows, really shows varying proportions of yellow and green, according to the season of the year and other influences. It is also important to note that Mr. Fruetz, in stating the number of plants needed in the different parts of the beds, refers to good-sized plants, such as he used. He says that if plants of only average size are used, the number specified by him may not always be sufficient to do a good job.

A Crescent Design.

The crescent design shown on this page was about six and one-half feet long in a straight line from point to point and measured about one foot nine inches across at its widest part. It was bordered all around with a single row of the common echeveria—Echeveria secunda glauca. The winding design in the center of the bed was edged with santolina and filled solidly with red alternantheras. The two large plants in the loops formed by the santolina were Echeveria metallica. The two ends and the back part of the crescent were filled solidly with yellow alternantheras. The echeveria border contained about fifty plants. The red alternantheras in the central design numbered about fifty, and there were about forty plants in the santolina edging. About fifty, in all, of the yellow alternantheras were used for the solid work in the ends and back of the bed.

Blanket Design, for Single Grave.

The blanket design in the foreground of the illustration on this page covered a space about $3\frac{1}{2} \times 6$ feet. It was surrounded by what may be termed a triple border—first, on the outside, a row of sixty-five Echeveria secunda glauca, then seventy-five red alternantheras, and next sixty santolina. Two oval designs, each 5×9 inches, extended lengthwise through the middle of the bed, with a round design, six inches in diameter, on each side. These four small designs were filled with yellow alternantheras, about fifty plants in all, and were all enclosed in an echeveria border, containing a total of about sixty plants. The filling in the body of the bed, surrounding the four small designs just described, consisted of red alternantheras, about 100 of them.

A Harp.

The harp pictured on page 18 was ten feet high, eight feet across the top and three feet across the base. The base contained about seventy Echeveria secunda glauca, and there was a single row of echeverias across the pedestal, a little farther up. The lower half of the pedestal, under the single row of echeverias, was filled with eighty Alternanthera rosea; the upper half of the pedestal contained about fifty yellow alternantheras. The four large plants were Echeveria metallica. The twenty harp strings were made of santolina, about 200 in all, with a background of about 200 yellow alternantheras. There was one Echeveria secunda glauca at the lower end of each string. The tuning-pins or wrest-pins, at the upper end of each string, were represented by a variety of echeveria which Mr. Fruetz habitually refers to simply as "the keys"; he thinks they are Echeveria Desmetiana, also known as E. Peacockii. The neck or top part of the harp, the back or soundboard, at the right, and the pillar, at the left, were all made of red alternantheras; this required about 200 plants. Running through the red of the soundboard and neck was a slender, trailing design of yellow alternantheras. The pillar also was crossed lightly by yellow alternantheras, placed in slanting, parallel lines, so as to have the appearance of wreathing twisted around the pillar in spiral form. These slender yellow lines were a most effective feature, though they do not show in the picture.

A Maltese Cross, on Two Graves.

The other illustration on page 18 shows a Maltese cross design, 5×6 feet in size and covering two graves. The outside row of Echeveria secunda glauca, extending all around, contained about eighty plants. Next to this was a border of red alternantheras, about sixty-five of them, and then a border of about sixty santolina, with one large plant, an Echeveria metallica, at each corner. The cross itself was bordered by two rows of plants—an outer row of ninety echeverias and an inner row of ninety yellow alternantheras. The arms of the cross were filled with about 100 red alternantheras. The circle in the center of the cross was bordered with yellow alternantheras and filled chiefly with Echeveria secunda glauca, though there were four echeverias of a larger size, probably E. Californica, and one E. metallica in the center of all. The four spaces between the arms of the cross were filled with about sixty yellow alternantheras.

MEMORIAL DAY CROPS.

An adequate supply of cut flowers at the end of May is a matter of supreme importance to every country florist and it means many dollars of additional revenue to be able to time all crops correctly. This is not easy, as vagaries of weather sometimes upset all our calculations. Ten weeks' stocks, if they are just beginning to show their flower spikes, will be in good season. These can be pushed a little, if late, when the spikes are in sight, but it is unwise to do this earlier and at no time should they have too much heat. Snapdragons are a crop which is quite persistent, and these are spoiled by forcing; 45 to 50 degrees at night should not be exceeded. Feed well when thoroughly established. Candytuft, if it seems at all late, should be given 5 degrees more heat, but when the flowers start to open it should be grown cooler. Double feverfew is a rather commonplace and coarse but, nevertheless, a useful Memorial day flower. The spikes on these should now be pushing up. Grow it cool all the time for best results.

Astilbes, or spiræas, as they are still mostly called, are plants which will stand hard forcing, so any which are at all late can be given as much fire heat as is at your command. Always be sure, however, to give them plenty of water and to go lightly on fumigating where they are. The varieties Gladstone and astilboides will take eight or ten days longer to come into bloom than the old Japonica. The beautiful new pink, Queen Alexandra, needs more time than any. Open its flowers in a well shaded house, to preserve their lovely peach pink color. In full sunlight they will fade out almost white.

Gladioli of the large flowered type are useful at Memorial day. It is not possible to get a whole batch of these in on time, as bulbs of large size will bloom much earlier, as a rule, than the smaller ones, but spikes can be retarded some time in water in a cold room. Spanish iris will need to be grown quite cool to hold it back until the end of May. The same applies to the smaller flowered gladioli.

While colored flowers have the greatest call for Memorial day, lilies always sell well. Longiflorums come on much faster now than earlier in the season, and any showing buds by May 1 will be open by May 30 in an ordinary greenhouse. In the case of candidums, four weeks' time is also ample for them to open in.

CANNAS AND CALADIUMS.

I would like to get some information on how to keep canna and caladium bulbs through the winter. I have been troubled a great deal this winter with what I would call the dry rot. I will give the conditions they have been handled under and would be glad to find out what causes the trouble. Last fall after a heavy frost I cut my cannas and caladiums off six inches above the ground, in the morning before the white frost was off the plants. The plants were dug up the same day, with a fair sized ball of soil left on each clump of bulbs, and I stored them under a bench in a greenhouse. The bench they were stored under had no pipes under it and I had chicken wire stretched six inches above the ground, so that they would not be on the damp ground. The temperature was 50 degrees at night and 65 degrees during the day. I did not clean the bulbs up until February, and I did not start to pot them until the first part of March. After they were cleaned up I put them back on the chicken wire without any packing around them. I would be pleased to know the best method of keeping these bulbs.

Blanket Bed Covering Two Graves at Rosehill Cemetery, Chicago.

S. C. C.

Your first mistake was in cutting the plants down while in a frozen condition and lifting them the same day. It would have been much better to have left them a few days before cutting them down, or failing that, to have let them stand two or three days to allow the cut portions to dry up well. The roots should be lifted on a dry, sunny day and soil should be left on the canna roots. Under a greenhouse bench is not an ideal place for storing these roots. There is likelihood of drip from above and temperature fluctuations are much greater than in a dry shed or cellar, where suitable shelves are available for storing them on.

As far as the caladiums are concerned, you will find that, if they are well dried after lifting, they will be freer from dry rot if packed in boxes or barrels of dry sand. For small growers of these it hardly pays to keep them over winter when they can be purchased every spring so cheaply. The cannas will winter finely in any shed or cellar where a temperature of 45 degrees is maintained. A few degrees higher or lower will not hurt them, but it is important that they are not exposed to drying fire heat, or dry rot will attack them. Leave a good ball of earth on your roots and store on shelves in this way and you will have much less trouble with dry rot.

WHAT A CYCLONE DOES.

The accompanying illustration gives some idea of what a cyclone might do if it really took a notion, for the storm that hit the establishment of J. E. Meinhart, at Webb City, Mo., about a week ago did most of its damage on the outside house in the range. Mr. Meinhart has about 50,000 feet of glass and, fortunately for him, the house on the right in the illustration is in much worse shape than any of the others; in fact, the balance of the place is in good condition except for the damage by hail that accompanied the high wind. The house at the right is a new one. It was finished only last autumn and contains the first plants ever grown in it. The house is 30x300 and is practically a total loss. Along the outside wall the house was built with a wood gutter instead of an eave plate, it being the intention to add another house there in the course of time. At both ends of the house the storm broke the gutter away from the pipe posts on which it was carried. At one end the purlins prevented the collapse of the roof, but at the other end the purlins gave way and the roof for quite a distance on that side hung perpendicularly from the ridge. The wavy shape of the gutter on the inside side of the house shows how severely the house was wrenched, the only wonder being that it did not go down.

Beatrice, Neb.—A local paper records that "E. W. Dole has quit the greenhouse business and has removed far from the maddening crowd's ignoble strife to the fragrant fields of alfalfa, to the hog and poultry ranch which he has established near the Fritz Kees property southwest of town."

GOOD EARLY AND LATE SORTS.

Will you kindly let me know what are the best three double chrysanthemums in white, yellow and pink? Please mention three early and three late varieties. They are to be planted in solid beds. My location is southern Pennsylvania.
W. N.

I should not like to state which are the best mums, because tastes differ widely and some varieties do much better in some sections than others. The following list, however, can be depended on throughout the country generally, and would perhaps be hard to beat:

Three early whites—Smith's Advance, Mrs. Arnold and Beatrice May. Early yellows—Yellow October Frost, Golden Glow and Monrovia. Early pinks—Montmort, Unaka and Pacific Supreme. These varieties are given in the order of their flowering and are the kind that have produced the most money for our market, which is New York.

A similar selection in late varieties would be about as follows:

Late whites—Timothy Eaton, W. H. Chadwick and Jeanne Nonin. Late yellows—Nagoya, Bonnaffon and Yellow Chadwick. Late pinks—Wells' Late Pink, W. T. Brock and Pink Chadwick. It will be noted that the Chadwicks are prominent in this section. They have been so satisfactory that I have included them. The finest Chadwicks I have ever seen were grown in solid beds and in what I would imagine would be somewhat similar conditions to W. N.'s.
C. H. Totty.

YOUNG STOCK IS SPINDLY.

I wish you would give me a little information regarding chrysanthemum plants. My October Frost and Golden Glow were rooted about March 12 and have made a fine growth. They are about twelve inches tall, but the stems are so small! I have been giving them full sun. Had I better shade them? Will that make the stems thicker and heavier?
E. H. M.

It would be the greatest mistake in the world to shade the young chrysanthemums—what they want is sunlight and lots of it. It is possible that the plants have been growing too close together, which would make them thin in growth. The only thing you can do with these plants now is to grow them along, put them in as good, rich soil as you can get and make them branch out that way. If these plants are cut down and allowed to come up again they will be nothing much but a multitude of small growths and buds, as the base of the stem is undoubtedly hard by this time. Set the plants out a foot apart and give them a little encouragement in the way of fertilizer, plenty of water and sunlight, and there is no reason in the world why they should not come out strong and healthy.

LATEST FACTS ON FUMIGATION

RESULTS OF RECENT RESEARCH.

The Problem.

Ever since the development of the idea that the destruction of our crops by insects was not necessarily the will of the Creator, the importance of controlling these pests has been realized and various methods have been employed for the purpose.

Briefly stated, the problem is: How can we destroy one form of life while it is on another form of life, without destroying or at least injuring the latter? How can we destroy the living substance or protoplasm of the insect at a time when it is in close contact with another living substance, without the destruction of both?

This is comparatively easy of solution in the case of chewing insects, as poisons which will not injure the plant can be placed upon it, for consumption by the insect. But most of our worst pests do not feed in this way, but by sucking the sap from inside the plant, and for such pests stomach poisons are of no avail. For these insects the logical complement to the stomach poison, therefore, is the contact insecticide, which destroys the insects which it touches. Difficulties at once arise, however, in carrying out this idea, as many of the insects of this class are exceedingly minute and correspondingly difficult to reach with the spray. Others, in addition, seem to delight in locating in places where there is little opportunity to get at them, while others, still, are so thoroughly protected by covering scales, waxy threads or other repellent structures that a contact insecticide strong enough to penetrate these protections and destroy the insects becomes dangerous to the plant the insects are on.

The Need of Caution.

It is only natural, therefore, realizing that insects must breathe, and remembering that gases penetrate everywhere, that the idea of overcoming the difficulties mentioned by using poisonous or suffocating gases should have been received with favor. Even by this method, however, danger of injury to the plant life cannot be avoided, for we must recognize from what has already been said that the living substance of a plant is liable to destruction by anything which will cause the death of the living substance of an animal on it. We should, therefore, expect to be able to kill by fumigation only such insects as are less resistant than the plants they are on. This is probably the reason why most fumigations in the past have been made so weak that the results were often unsatisfactory. It is only natural to be cautious in work of this kind, but caution which gives a fumigation so weak that the most delicate insects fail to be destroyed is merely a waste of time and money.

Of the various fumigants, sulphur has probably been used the longest. But sulphur apparently acts as vigorously on plants as on animals, which means that fumigation with this substance at an effective strength is liable to produce disastrous results. The safest time to use sulphur is when a house is empty, using a strong dose, to clear out any insects which may be nicotine have been placed on the market. These are, of course, more efficient, but even with them the more resistant stages of many pests survive until for their destruction it is necessary to use such a large amount of the material that the expense of treatment makes it prohibitive.

Hydrocyanic Acid Gas.

Hydrocyanic acid gas is perhaps the most active poisonous gas known—at least, at all well known. It can be produced from various chemicals, but until recently it has generally been obtained by adding sulphuric acid to potassium cyanide. It has been used experimentally, and by comparing results a general rule for its production and application has been outlined and published and has come into quite general use for greenhouse work. Strangely enough, however, just what amounts of the various materials should be taken, and the best grades of these for the purpose, have only recently been carefully investigated and the results of this work have not as yet become widely known. Let us consider the materials and methods of cyanide fumigation, then, in some detail.

There must be a standard established in the production of the gas, if results are to be compared and conclusions drawn with any safety. The man who fumigates at a supposed certain strength of cyanide, but who uses the fifty per cent cyanide, which is the usual strength kept at drug stores, instead of the ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent material, will of course get results widely different from those obtained by persons using the stronger article. We must use standard materials, then, if we use the same formula in their preparation.

Purity of the Cyanide.

Three materials are necessary—potassium cyanide, sulphuric acid and water. We have to consider their quality and the quantity to use.

It is important to use a cyanide which is practically pure. The ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent grade manufactured by Merck is a reliable material, and the products of similar strength made by a number of other manufacturers are also satisfactory. With lower grades less of the material from which the gas is formed is, of course, available, and there is also a question as to what result the presence of other substances may produce. With a fifty per cent cyanide, for example, there would be only about half as much cyanogen to combine with the hydrogen of the sulphuric acid as with the ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent grade, and if among the constituents of the other fifty per cent there should be something which would combine

Tobacco as a Fumigant.

Tobacco as a fumigant needs little comment. The active substance, of course, is nicotine, of which in ordinary tobacco there is, on an average, only about four or five per cent—not enough to accomplish anything like thorough work. Vaporized, it will kill some plant lice, some thrips perhaps, and some adult white flies. But in every case certain stages of these insects, which are more resistant, remain unaffected and from them the house is soon restocked with trouble.

To overcome this difficulty of the weakness of tobacco, extracts of various kinds containing larger amounts of with the hydrocyanic acid gas as fast as it formed, there might be little or none of the gas left to do its work. Therefore, use a practically pure potassium cyanide.

The Sulphuric Acid.

Perhaps the sulphuric acid is the most variable of the three factors used in fumigation. At least, it is exceedingly important that it should meet certain requirements if the treatment is to be satisfactory, as the use of a wrong grade of acid is liable to cause injury to foliage. Commercial sulphuric acid is satisfactory, provided it contains no nitric acid and is of the strength known as 66 degrees Baumé. Such an acid should average ninety-three to ninety-four per cent of actual sulphuric acid, the other six or seven per cent consisting of impurities of various kinds. Sulphuric acid is made either from free sulphur or from sulphur combined with iron or copper and known as pyrites. Ordinarily the pyrites used contains arsenic, etc., to some extent. In the manufacture it becomes mixed with fumes of nitric acid and, when pyrites is used rather than sulphur, much more nitric acid becomes mixed with the sulphuric acid produced than in the case where sulphur is taken. The nitric acid can be removed by refining, of course, but this increases the cost.

The danger in having nitric acid present is that it is energetic in its action and also volatilizes readily. Accordingly, when sulphuric acid containing it is added to water, the heat produced begins to volatilize the nitric acid, and when the cyanide is added it increases the heat, and the passing off into air of the hydrocyanic acid gas causes the nitric acid also to pass into the air. When this condenses again on the leaves its action is vigorous and also extremely injurious, causing burning wherever it touches.

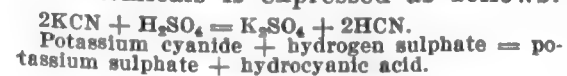

For the greatest economy of gas production, then, the acid should be of the grade known as 66 degrees Baumé, and in addition it should be entirely free from nitric acid.

Proportions of the Ingredients.

Of the water little need be said. It is, of course, possible that waters containing impurities might include something which could modify the chemical process to some extent, but this, at least in New England, would in all probability never be the case.

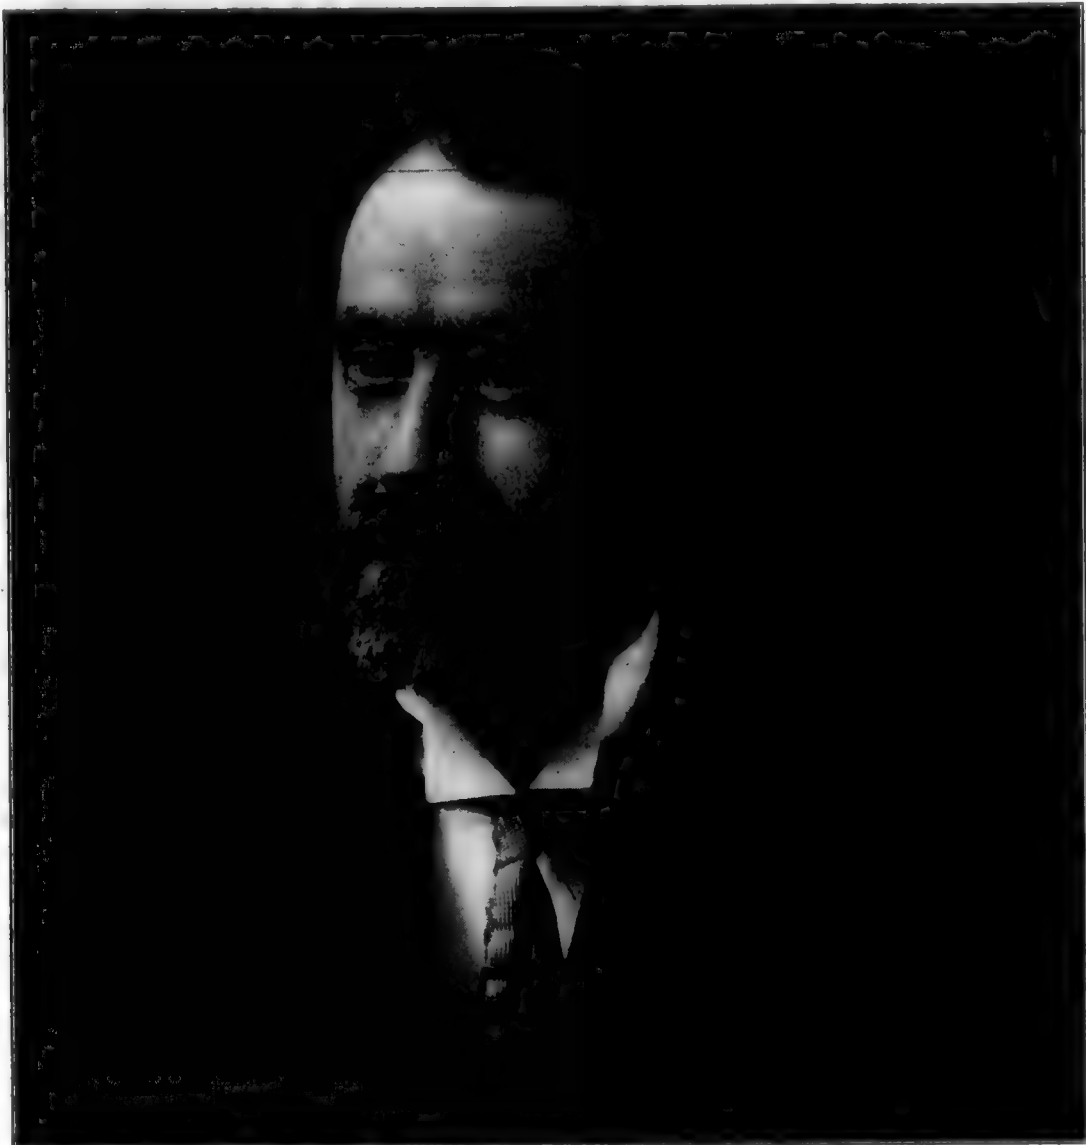

The proportions to use of these different materials have been variously given at different times. One writer, who has been widely followed, says: "A half more acid, liquid measurement, than cyanide, and a half more water than acid are used." Another suggests a 1-2-3 formula. Recent studies on this point have been based on the principle that when one chemical acts upon another to produce a third, the amount actually used is always the same, and the presence of more than enough of either simply means a surplus of it left unchanged at the completion of the combination.

The actual process of combination of the chemicals is expressed as follows:

An Excess of Acid.

If we take an ounce by weight of the potassium cyanide, we find that three-quarters of a fluid ounce of sulphuric acid is sufficient to give hydrogen enough to combine with all the cyanogen there is in the potassium cyanide. On the other hand, a little of the hydrocyanic acid may dissolve in the water present instead of passing off into the air as a gas, and would thus be lost, so far as use goes. The addition of another quarter of an ounce of acid will heat the water more, and tend to drive the gas out, so that for this reason it seems to pay to use a little excess of acid over what is needed for the chemical process, to get more of the gas.

Too much excess of acid, however, produces trouble in a different way. The formula given shows that potassium sulphate is formed in addition to the hydrocyanic acid gas. Now, potassium sulphate, though a solid, dissolves in the water present, but if there is much spare sulphuric acid also present, less of the potassium sulphate dissolves, and instead it tends to form a crust covering the pieces of potassium cyanide not already acted upon, so that the sulphuric acid cannot reach these pieces to combine with them and produce more gas. For this reason, then, too much acid is as undesirable as too little, and if after a fumigation has been completed there is a solid or a slushy substance left in the dish, this indicates that either too little water or too much acid was used.

The Action of the Water.

At present, then, the proper amounts to use seem to be: One part by weight of cyanide, and one part by measure of acid.

Water is not absolutely essential to the production of hydrocyanic acid gas by the action of sulphuric acid on potassium cyanide, as the acid could be poured directly upon the cyanide, and some gas be given off. The process would quickly come to an end, however, in this case, as the potassium sulphate formed would so coat over the cyanide that the acid would either fail to reach it or would do its work too slowly. Water is useful in dissolving both the cyanide and the potassium sulphate produced, and in hastening the chemical reaction, which is of importance, as the maximum amount of gas is needed as quickly as possible for effective results. If too little water is present the potassium sulphate tending to coat the cyanide is not dissolved, and this delays the process if it does not in part prevent it. Then the heat produced by mixing the acid and the water is a great advantage, as it hastens the chemical reaction.

It is evident that too little water will prevent the production of the maximum amount of gas. Experiment shows that too much water acts in the same way, more of the gas entering the water and thus reducing the amount in the air. A series of tests using varying amounts of water has shown that for the best results there should be three times as much water as acid, and the best proportions of all three materials to use, therefore, become:

Cyanide, one part by weight.
Acid, one part by measure.
Water, three parts by measure.

The Right Order in Mixing.

It is desirable to utilize the heat produced by the addition of the sulphuric

RESULTS OF RECENT RESEARCH.

The Problem.

Ever since the development of the idea that the destruction of our crops by insects was not necessarily the will of the Creator, the importance of controlling these pests has been realized and various methods have been employed for the purpose.

Briefly stated, the problem is: How can we destroy one form of life while it is on another form of life, without destroying or at least injuring the latter? How can we destroy the living substance or protoplasm of the insect at a time when it is in close contact with another living substance, without the destruction of both?

This is comparatively easy of solution in the case of chewing insects, as poisons which will not injure the plant can be placed upon it, for consumption by the insect. But most of our worst pests do not feed in this way, but by sucking the sap from inside the plant, and for such pests stomach poisons are of no avail. For these insects the logical complement to the stomach poison, therefore, is the contact insecticide, which destroys the insects which it touches. Difficulties at once arise, however, in carrying out this idea, as many of the insects of this class are exceedingly minute and correspondingly difficult to reach with the spray. Others, in addition, seem to delight in locating in places where there is little opportunity to get at them, while others, still, are so thoroughly protected by covering scales, waxy threads or other repellent structures that a contact insecticide strong enough to penetrate these protections and destroy the insects becomes dangerous to the plant the insects are on.

The Need of Caution.

It is only natural, therefore, realizing that insects must breathe, and remembering that gases penetrate everywhere, that the idea of overcoming the difficulties mentioned by using poisonous or suffocating gases should have been received with favor. Even by this method, however, danger of injury to the plant life cannot be avoided, for we must recognize from what has already been said that the living substance of a plant is liable to destruction by anything which will cause the death of the living substance of an animal on it. We should, therefore, expect to be able to kill by fumigation only such insects as are less resistant than the plants they are on. This is probably the reason why most fumigations in the past have been made so weak that the results were often unsatisfactory. It is only natural to be cautious in work of this kind, but caution

Of the various fumigants, sulphur has probably been used the longest. But sulphur apparently acts as vigorously on plants as on animals, which means that fumigation with this substance at an effective strength is liable to produce disastrous results. The safest time to use sulphur is when a house is empty, using a strong dose, to clear out any insects which may be nicotine have been placed on the market. These are, of course, more efficient, but even with them the more resistant stages of many pests survive until for their destruction it is necessary to use such a large amount of the material that the expense of treatment makes it prohibitive.

Hydrocyanic Acid Gas.

Hydrocyanic acid gas is perhaps the most active poisonous gas known at least, at all well known. It can be produced from various chemicals, but until recently it has generally been obtained by adding sulphuric acid to potassium cyanide. It has been used experimentally, and by comparing results a general rule for its production and application has been outlined and published and has come into quite general use for greenhouse work. Strangely enough, however, just what amounts of the various materials should be taken, and the best grades of these for the purpose, have only recently been carefully investigated and the results of this work have not as yet become widely known. Let us consider the materials and methods of cyanide fumigation then, in some detail.

There must be a standard established in the production of the gas, if results are to be compared and conclusions drawn with any safety. The man who fumigates at a supposed certain strength of cyanide, but who uses the fifty per cent cyanide, which is the usual strength kept at drug stores, instead of the ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent material, will of course get results widely different from those obtained by persons using the stronger article. We must use standard materials, then, if we use the same formula in their preparation.

Purity of the Cyanide.

Three materials are necessary—potassium cyanide, sulphuric acid and water. We have to consider their quality and the quantity to use.

It is important to use a cyanide which is practically pure. The ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent grade manufactured by Merek is a reliable material, and the products of similar strength made by a number of other manufacturers are also satisfactory. With lower grades less of the material from which the gas is formed is, of course, available, and there is also a question as to what result the presence of other substances may produce. With a fifty per cent cyanide, for example, there would be only about half as much cyanogen to combine with the hydrogen of the sulphuric acid as with the ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent grade, and if among the constituents of the other fifty per cent there should be something which would combine acid to the water, to hasten the production of hydrocyanic acid gas. Accordingly, the water should be placed in the jar first, and as the heat produced by adding the sulphuric acid is considerable, graniteware dishes are preferable to earthenware ones, as the latter frequently crack from the heat. The sulphuric acid should be added to the water, and while it is hot the cyanide should be dropped into the rest.

The Right Order in Mixing.

It is desirable to utilize the heat produced by the addition of the sulphuric

To destroy any particular kind of insect, at least a certain strength or density of the gas is necessary. This is also true for plants. Fortunately, the insects in most cases are killed more easily, i. e., with a smaller amount of the gas, than are the plants. At the present time the main gap in our knowledge is: A lack of knowledge as to how strong the gas must be, in order to kill all the individuals of each kind of insect concerned. A strength sufficient to destroy all the plant lice in a house would probably fail to kill the thrips; thus we must learn how strong the gas should be to accomplish the result desired, for each different kind of insect.

Avoiding the Various Dangers.

Then, having settled the strength necessary to kill the different insects, we must also know the limit of strength of gas each different kind of plant can stand. If we can destroy all the thrips in a house by the gas produced by a gram of potassium cyanide for each cubic foot, this knowledge avails little until we find out whether the plants present are injured by this strength, for if they are killed or seriously injured by the treatment, the remedy is liable to be worse than the disease.

Finally, we must know whether light, temperature and humidity have any influence, and whether it is safer to fumigate for a longer time with a weak dose, or for a shorter time with a stronger dose.

It seems strange that years of fumigation have failed to provide us with the knowledge needed on these points, but this is the case with only a few exceptions. Fumigation, perhaps for this reason, is generally applied with caution and with correspondingly poor results.

At the present time these problems are beginning to receive more attention, and some of the conclusions reached will be presented in the next paper.

DENVER.

The Market.

The daily sales and the general condition of the market seem to be entirely satisfactory. Carnation plants are being thrown out, and there are just about enough flowers now to meet the demand. Red is scarce and cannot always be obtained. The price still hovers around the 2-cent mark. Long Beauties are going to the dump, as everybody is in crop at this time and there is no special call. A sudden fancy has been taken to Spanish iris and this is rather a surprise, as it could hardly be given away last year. All kinds of sweet peas except white are plentiful, but are cleaned out every day. Easter and calla lilies are at a standstill. There is extremely little smilax, plumosus or Sprengeri.

The season is about a month late, and consequently is cold and disagreeable. Landscape gardeners have not been able to make any favorable comparisons with the same period last year. There is plenty of work to be done, but it is held back by the damp, cold weather. Many of the lawns made last year have been winter-killed. There is not a climbing rose that is alive above ground, unless it was taken down and covered last fall.

Various Notes.

The wind which struck Denver and vicinity April 13 did considerable damage, blowing out some glass in nearly every establishment. The smokestack at L. A. Kintzele's place was blown down, striking the end of one of his houses and causing about $300 damage.

The Park Floral Co. is preparing to move its offices to the place at Colfax avenue and Josephine street, and the rooms above the Colfax store are being made ready. J. A. Valentine will retain his office at the Broadway store, but will spend most of his time at the greenhouses. Mr. Valentine motored to Pueblo last Tuesday and returned on Thursday with Mrs. Valentine, who had been there for two weeks. The Park Floral Co. believes in rewarding deserving employees, and has recently made E. P. Neiman a member of the firm. Mr. Neiman has been connected with the business for several years and has had charge of the Colfax store. Hereafter he will do all the buying, and will be found at the Broadway store.

In my last report it was stated that F. X. Goeschl had gone to Loma, Cal., which was a mistake. It should have been Loma, Colo. Word is now received that shortly after reaching that place he was taken ill with pneumonia, and died within a week. He leaves a wife and several small children.

Albert E. Mauff, of the Mauff Floral Co., is an exceedingly busy man these days, his work as secretary of horticulture and as election commissioner taking the greater part of his time.

C. Zbindin, a former Denver florist, who recently had charge of Charles Garwood's store, at Rock Springs, Wyo., has just left the hospital, where he was compelled to have his leg amputated at the knee, after a slight injury to his foot, which caused blood poisoning. He has taken the store at Rock Springs and will open it at once.

The Barteldes Seed Co. has a number of extra salesmen in the store, who are kept busy every minute. To a casual observer, the rush is such as to remind him of a retail flower store the day before Christmas.

Some fine sweet peas of the Spencer varieties are being brought in by Fred Hall.

Mrs. B. C. Robinson, of La Junta, who spent about two weeks in Denver attending to business affairs, returned home last Saturday. She said that the water question there is quite a serious matter, and that it will be impossible to run a greenhouse satisfactorily until something is done to get rid of the alkali in the water. Deep wells have been dug, but iron is then present in such quantity as to be almost as bad as the alkali. Water is shipped in in large milk cans, and is sold at fifteen cents a can. Every drop of rain water is zealously caught in tubs and barrels. In the winter, snow is melted and used. When plants need watering they are put in a tub, and the water that runs from the pots is used again, not a drop being wasted.

An article in one of our daily papers, April 18, which stated that Mothers' day would be "next Sunday," caused a great deal of confusion both here and in adjoining towns. Some were in favor of two Mothers' days if the people wanted them, but it did not seem fair to take advantage of the mistake and the paper was asked to make a correction.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

General conditions in the wholesale market have been good during the last week. There has been no material change in quotations, but the demand has been more brisk. American Beauties of the best quality have not been so plentiful and the top grades of Chatenay, Lady Hillingdon, Mrs. Jardine and Bulgarie met with a much better demand. Killarneys are plentiful but cleaning up better. Carnations are not so plentiful as they have been and the best grades have touched $4 per hundred. Orchids, still in large supply, are of good quality and there has been a large call for these for funeral work. Lilies are moving well at $2 and $4 per hundred. There is little call for callas. There is the usual supply of daffodils and tulips. Gardenias are still plentiful, only the best meeting with ready sale. Good smilax and asparagus are scarce. Sweet peas of best quality are meeting with ready sale, but many shipments of these are of poor quality. Violets are about over for the season and those that are coming in have to be disposed of to the street men.

Various Notes.

Young & Nugent had the family order for the funeral of General Grant and some of the designs were the best ever turned out in this city. The principal flowers used in all of the work were cattleyas and lilies.

The Titanic disaster has upset the plans of many of those who intended to visit the international show in London this month, and several of the prominent members of the party are now expressing some doubts about making the trip.

Many of the seed houses, especially those doing the big over-the-counter trade, are much disappointed in the late season, as it is not bringing their sales up to last year, but a few hot days will change these conditions and bring the rush to the counters.

The auction houses are reporting a good demand and good prices. In fact, they are now short of stock, having sold out nearly everything that has been consigned to them.

C. H. Totty is sending Henshaw & Fenrich consignments of Wodenethe carnation and Sunburst rose. They are finding quick sale among the high class retailers of the city.

W. E. Maynard, the new sales manager for P. H. Goodsell, reports excellent sales in his downtown nursery. This enterprise is really an innovation, as here in a large basement of a modern building in the heart of the downtown section of New York city are planted bay trees, rhododendrons and other hardy stock.

Twenty-eighth street learns of another florist who has come to Madison. He is William E. Tricker III, who arrived April 19. Both mother and son are doing well.

C. H. Totty has not been seen in the wholesale district yet in his new high-power car, but this is probably due to the poor roads at this time of the year. With spring advanced and better roads our chairman of the National Flower Show committee will undoubtedly be found many times just within the speed limits, as his duties call for many visits to the city.

M. C. Ebel, treasurer of the Aphine Mfg. Co., is counted as among the visitors when he comes to New York city these days. He is not as frequently seen as in the past and accounts for this by reporting this season's business far in excess of last season.

Harry Bunyard reports that a meeting of the executive committee of the National Sweet Pea Society of America will be held in Boston early in May and that there will be a number of new prizes added to the final schedule for the sweet pea show to be held in Boston in July.

Before an official audience a royal English oak tree was planted in Central park a few days ago to take the place of the one planted fifty-two years ago by the then Prince of Wales, later King Edward VII. The tree that died had been a memorial, which will be celebrated in December, 1914, as the one hundredth anniversary of the peace treaty, which has never been broken between the United States and England.

OBITUARY.

Fred Ehret.

Fred Ehret dead! It seems impossible, unbelievable. Only yesterday he was in our midst, going quietly about his work with that pleasant smile and kindly greeting that gradually won their way into all our hearts. He had not been well—we all knew that—but the indisposition, though painful, was believed to be curable. He slipped off to the hospital quietly April 19. Mrs. Ehret was with him, of course. April 22 an operation took place that revealed conditions far more serious than had been anticipated. Mr. Ehret died in the German hospital, Philadelphia, April 25. The funeral, held at his home, 1509 Fairmount avenue, on the afternoon of April 29, was largely attended by his friends. The gifts of flowers that were sent were beautiful and so many that the parlor where Mr. Ehret lay was completely filled by them and its customary appearance changed to a living flower picture.

Fred Ehret was born in Germany forty-eight years ago. He came to this country when a lad of 18 and worked hard at several places, and in several branches of our business. He first came into prominence in the latter 80s as a curbstome dealer in plants in front of the drug store at the northwest corner of Broad street and Fairmount avenue, Philadelphia. He had excellent judgment and confidence with which to back it, buying plants in larger quantities than usual at that time and selling them successfully. After two or three seasons as a dealer in plants Mr. Ehret opened a store at 1407 Fairmount avenue for the wholesaling of cut flowers, his aim being to supply the uptown section of the city with what they needed in cut flowers and greens. He began modestly with a basket on his arm and later bought a horse and wagon for delivery. He was shrewd, hard-working and thoroughly trustworthy in all that the term implies. An excellent business was soon built up that prospered for fifteen years. Gradually a retail business in cut flowers, plants and designs was developed, and in 1905 Mr. Ehret decided to abandon the wholesale for the retail. So successful was he that three years later the Floral Arcadia was opened on Broad street and connected with his other store at 1407 Fairmount avenue by a conservatory in the rear. Both stores have been run since. Mr. Ehret is survived by a widow, his partner both at home and in business, and one little daughter.

F. X. Goeschl.

A report has just been received of the death of F. X. Goeschl at Loma, Colo. Until recently he had been in business in Denver, Colo. A few weeks ago, however, he and his family removed to Loma. Shortly after reaching that place, it is said, he was taken ill with pneumonia and died within a week. He is survived by his wife and several small children.

George W. Parker.

George W. Parker, well known florist, at Norwalk, O., died at the family home Monday morning, April 29, from a general breakdown in health. Mr. Parker had been in failing health for about one year, but had been confined to the house only about four weeks. The deceased was 77 years old and was a native of Bronson township, Ohio, and spent the greater part of his allotted life in Huron county, Ohio. He had lived in his East Main street home for thirty-five years.

Mr. Parker was married in July, 1863, and is survived by his wife and three children, Miss Achsa Parker and Willard Parker, of Norwalk, and Miss Phoebe Parker, of Valley City, N. D. The son states that the business probably will be sold.

Clinton H. Wilbur.

Clinton H. Wilbur died April 24 at his home at Binghamton, N. Y., following an illness of one week. Mr. Wilbur was well known as a man of sterling qualities and his death is a shock to his many friends. He is survived by his wife, two children and three sisters.

Harry J. Hunter.

Harry J. Hunter, a practical nurseryman, who for thirteen years was city forester at Detroit, Mich., and who established the model nursery maintained by Detroit at Palmer park, died of pneumonia April 17, at his home, 364 McGraw avenue, Detroit, after an illness of ten days. He was 64 years of age and had lived in Detroit more than fifteen years. It was mainly through his efforts that Detroit achieved its high rank as a city beautiful. He was born in Rochester, N. Y., and for many years was connected with one of the largest nurseries in the country, removing to Detroit later to enter the employ of D. M. Ferry & Co. Mrs. Hunter and a grown daughter and son survive.

RESULTS.

We give them. You get them.
 We both have them.

THERE are four double-page spreads in this issue—count 'em—four!

Is it because the prepared magnolia leaves have come into such general use that galax is selling so poorly this season?

THE retail florists who do garden work say business is almost too good—the outdoor department is so crowded that it detracts from the attention given the cut flower end.

NOT a few subscribers save themselves
 the bother of annual renewal by sending
 The Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-
 two visits of the paper.

WITH so many growers cutting down on Richmond for next season, those who retain it may be able to get the extra prices that apparently are needed to make it pay as well as Killarney and White Killarney.

H. F. WINTER, of the Charleston Cut Flower & Plant Co., calls attention that the governor of West Virginia not only has issued a Mothers' day proclamation but calls upon everyone to attend church that day wearing a white flower.

THIS is the season of quick clearances.
 The Review urges every advertiser to act promptly in the matter of cutting out items that are sold out. Don't let dead offers stand even one week. To do so only makes extra work in sending money back.

PUBLICATIONS that are full of business puffs and personal flattery of advertisers sometimes do nicely for a while, but have you noticed how in the end most of them resort to giving some article free to subscribers, or to some other scheme to attract people who will no longer buy the publication for itself?

SEVERAL of the large growers in the midsection from which come the Memorial day peony blooms send word that the plants are not throwing the usual number of growths, though the strength seems to be improved thereby.
 But it is a fairly safe guess that there will be a good supply of flowers when the demand comes, for the acreage in peonies has expanded wonderfully in the last ten years.

If there is anything the matter with a florist's business, nine times out of ten it is neglect. Most of us are overdue at the dentist's, even when we all know the consequences, and in the same way the needs of a business are neglected:
 "We'll do it tomorrow." Frequently, however, the neglect is of another character: Money comes easily, so what the need to conserve it! In a dry time a good many people neglect to keep one eye on the umbrella, thinking it never is going to rain again—but it usually does.

BOSTONS, that are difficult to sell when cold weather arrives in autumn, always come into request about the time the spring days arrive.

If you mail plants you should attach an inspection certificate or the postmaster is likely to refuse them admission to the mails. See the Nursery Department of this week's issue.

GOLDFISH and perfumery are fine side lines for flower stores, but those who want them should get them from advertisers in The Review, instead of ordering from the traveler for an unknown house who says "Sign here, please," without stopping to take breath or to give the florist a chance to read the contract, much less discover its meaning.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING.

The classified advertising in The Review is bringing even better returns this season than in previous years—perhaps that's why last week's issue carried thirteen solid pages of classified plant offers, the greatest quantity ever printed in any one edition. This is the way it works:

Shall have to tell you to stop my geranium ad;
 sold out; could sell two or three times as much;
 have shipped to Pittsfield, Mass., and Tucson, Ariz., as well as points between.—S. M. Harbison, Danville, Ky., April 22, 1912.

Please discontinue the vinca ad; sold out, thanks; only wish I had more.—Simon Dumser, Elgin, Ill., April 29, 1912.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market opened somewhat weaker Monday, April 29, than it did the preceding week. While the retrogression was not great, it was the result of the weather conditions. The rain, which cut off the retail outlet Sunday, and the cloudy weather which followed on Monday, served to check demand more than it did production and caused something of a drop in prices, the same being necessary in order to move stock from the counters. Nevertheless the drop was not an exceptional one and, with a bright day Tuesday, the market gave signs of resuming normal conditions.

Only one or two items were to be found that were in really strong demand last week. Valley and sweet peas were popular with the buyers throughout the week, while the supply was hardly equal to the call and hence the wholesalers were able to obtain fair prices. Sweet peas were off crop at the start of this week, on account of the dark weather, while the retail demand was as strong as usual. The retailers had been pushing them during the days when the supply was plentiful and consequently the demand continued when the supply was light. The Butterfly is more popular than the winter peas, which are fast disappearing. The Butterfly varieties have dropped their buds badly during the several recent dark days.

Roses in general have cleared without any great trouble, although American Beauties have become more plentiful and require pushing. Killarney and White Killarney are in full supply, the medium and long getting fair returns, but there has appeared to be an over-supply of the shorter grade and a drop in price was noted at the end of last week. They found little favor and the buyer could almost name his own price with the opening of the market

April 29. The new roses were not in oversupply and fair prices were to be had for Mrs. Aaron Ward, Prince de Bulgarie and Melody. Richmonds and My Maryland enjoyed a fair market and did not suffer much from oversupply.

Carnations, which were a little short of the demand at the start of the previous week, came in more freely as the week progressed and by Saturday, April 27, there were plenty to be had at a slight reduction. The demand on Saturday was brisk, but the rain of Sunday shut off all demand except that for funeral work and there were more than were required on Monday, when the call was light and included only the best grade. Orchids were to be had at fair prices, but no unusually large quantities were received. Calla lilies were plentiful, but they seemed to lack a market. Easter lilies appeared to move a little better, although there was no special reason for it. Spanish iris was abundant throughout the week and, though it did not bring any fancy prices, it was moved along with the other stock at fair rates. There were numerous shipments of lilacs from southern shippers, but in most cases, like the week before, it was poor stock and commanded little attention from the buyers, who took only the better stock. Some fine mignonette was to be had and considerable of it was called for during the week. Indoor bulbous stock is about at an end and the southern bulbous stock did not come in such large quantities as before. Still there was no great demand for what little there was and prices were about the same.

Violets are done. Snapdragon is plentiful, except white. Daisies do not sell the way they had been expected to. Gladiolus Colvillei has been added to the list.

Greens found plenty of call. Ferns are getting bad and there are those who predict a flurry in the near future. Sprenger, plumosus, galax and Mexican ivy found the usual market and the supply was first-class, but not overabundant.

Most of the wholesalers are encouraging their customers to push Mothers' day. The belief is general that if the retailers will advertise along the lines suggested in The Review of April 25 the day can be made to take a place among the important special flower days. The disposition is to hold prices steady, except, of course, on white carnations, which will be made the means of selling other stock—the buyer who orders only white will have to pay a Erne & Klingel.

The new wholesale house in the room just vacated by C. W. McKellar is Erne & Klingel. The partnership began May 1 and the store will be open for business as soon as the decorating and fixtures can be completed, probably May 6.

It had previously been announced that Charles Erne had secured this excellent location for a start in business on his own account and that Fred Klingel should join him will not surprise the trade, for the two have been close friends for years and it has been known that Mr. Klingel, as well as Mr. Erne, was looking for a chance to get into business for himself. The two should make a good team. Mr. Erne has been on the market for years, with the long established house of E. H. Hunt and later with the Chicago Flower Growers' Association. Mr. Klingel made his start in the trade with George Reinberg, but for some time has been with John Kruchten, who speaks highly of him.

Various Notes.

H. Van Gelder, for Percy Jones, has announced that within a short time, in addition to the lines now handled, he will take up everything in the nature of supplies that is required by the retailers and growers. Among other things he will put in a line of exclusive ribbons, baskets, wire sundries, pottery, etc.

Fred Greder, 6952 Cottage Grove avenue, has taken out a building permit for a greenhouse at that address, to cost $1,500.

Sperry, now A. L. Vaughan & Co., arrived back in Chicago April 20 to look after business matters for a few days after having been in California for three months. He expects to return to the coast after closing up some real estate deals.

Master Lawrence Story Washburn celebrated his first birthday Saturday, April 27, and acted as host to a large number of Hinsdale friends. The guests' ages ranged from 8 months to 2 years.

Hoerber Bros. report that the last week the demand for White Killarneys was almost abnormal. Practically every order called for them.

The marriage of George T. Elliott, eldest son of William H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass., and Miss Alma Brochart, of Morton Grove, was solemnized Thursday, April 25, Rev. Joseph Hayes Chandler officiating. T. E. Waters acted as best man, with Miss Ethel Brochart, a sister of the bride, as bridesmaid. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott left on the evening train for Council Bluffs, Ia., where Mr. Elliott will take up duties for the King Construction Co. He formerly was with the Poehlmann Bros. Co. at Morton Grove.

T. F. Keenan, the south side florist, has taken a position as salesman with the W. W. Barnard Co., at its new store on West Madison street, during the busy season.

An unusually large attendance is expected at the meeting of the Florists' Club tonight to hear S. A. Jamieson, of the Universal Portland Cement Co., on "Concrete in Greenhouses."

Tim Matchen says that Peter Reinberg's force is taking advantage of the fine condition of the soil after the rain to rush a few hundred thousand carnation plants into the field. Most of the growers are busy planting this week.

Kroeschell Bros. Co. states that it has

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association reports the arrival last week of the first Gladiolus Colvillei and also of cut sprays of the pink spiraea, Queen Alexandra. Mike Fink took charge of city sales there April 29.

C. A. Samuelson has recently substituted a White delivery car for the Packard used last year.

Wietor Bros. say that the way Mrs. Jardine is acting since spring days arrived has made them hesitate over their determination to dispense with it after this season.

At Wellworth Farm Kidwell & Ellsworth are putting up a new house, 30x200. Carnations are to be dropped and all the space given to Killarney and White Killarney except a few benches of Mrs. Ward and Sunburst.

A. Miller, of Henderson & Co., is home from a trip to Texas.

Mrs. K. N. Cooper, manager of the Auburndale Goldfish Co., says the goldfish supply is running short, particularly in the large, fancy fish, but she expects to have a fresh supply shortly.

"Florists repeatedly come to us asking for better quality in supplies, but when we tell them the price is higher in proportion they take the cheaper article. Why is it? Don't they realize the better supplies are more than worth the additional cost?" This was from Mr. Gelderman, of L. The Market.

We continue to get quite cool weather and, as sunshine has not been overabundant, the supply of flowers has not as yet been much in excess of the demand. Roses sold well last week, especially American Beauties, Killarneys, Tafts and Hillingdons. Some nice Carnots are now arriving and sell quickly. Carnations are not in heavy supply, and prices are well maintained. Violets are over, except for a few doubles, and these are now quite small. Some of the bulb specialists have finished cutting their indoor crops and few of these flowers are now to be seen. Quite a few outside narcissi are, however, now obtainable.

Sweet peas have been among the best selling flowers of late, prices varying from 35 cents to $1.50 per hundred. A number of growers are now sending in fine Spencers, which always command the highest prices. Lily of the valley has been in better demand. Lilium longiflorum and callas have each been a drug and sell at low prices. Snapdragon, while of fine quality, is now in oversupply and prices are down. Marguerites are abundant and the quality leaves nothing to be desired. The call is best for yellow. English primroses and bachelor's buttons sell better now, when violets are practically gone. Spanish iris is fine and in demand. Gladioli are as yet limited to Peach Blossom and Blushing Bride. Gardenias are lower in price. Good flowers are in demand, but many are poor in quality. Cattleya Mossiæ is now obtainable and sells better than Schroederæ, which buyers fight shy of.

Both asparagus and adiantum are rather soft, and smilax scarce.

There is now a good call for baskets of pansies, daisies and myosotis, and bedding geraniums have appeared on a number of stands in the markets. Hydrangeas are also in demand.

Various Notes.

M. A. Patten and J. K. M. L. Farquhar sailed on the S. S. Laconia for Liverpool April 30. They will visit the European continent before the opening of the big London international show.

Frank J. Dolansky is cutting a fine crop of Cattleya Mossiæ at present and has already flowered several white ones.

McAlpine Bros., of the New England

Rose Conservatories, Exeter, N. H., are busy erecting a new Lord & Burnham house 60 x 400. Their roses are of splendid quality and always clean out quickly. Richmond, Killarney, White Killarney and Ward are their specialties.

I noted in Julius H. Zinn's window last week pans of the beautiful pink verbena, Miss Wilmott, which should become as popular here as it has in Great Britain.

John T. Gale, of Tewksbury, is cutting some grand sweet peas. His specialty is Pink Beauty, of his own raising, which is fine. Mr. Gale will finish picking double violets this week. They have done remarkably well this season.

M. F. Gray, of Mattapan, is having a good call for his pans of geraniums at the Boston Coöperative Market. They are stocky and well bloomed plants.

W. S. Phelps, of Marlboro, is cutting a fine crop of the hardy delphiniums in various shades of blue, for which J. M. Cohen finds an excellent demand.

William T. Walke, of Salem, is strong on hydrangeas at present and disposes of large numbers at the Boston Coöperative Market.

Geo. E. Buxton, of Nashua, N. H., has two fine snapdragons, one a medium pink, and the other a soft rose, which W. A. Hastings finds a ready sale for at the Boston Flower Exchange.

William Nicholson expects to sail on the Philadelphia from New York, due to arrive in time for the opening of the international flower show in London.

The Mishawum Flower Co. is disposing of large quantities of high grade sweet peas through J. M. Cohen at the Boston Coöperative Market.

Welch Bros. since Easter have had excellent business, their shipping trade being exceptionally good. They have just received a large importation of bay trees from Europe.

William R. Nicholson is cutting many of the finest marguerites, with splendid stems, coming into Boston. The new Mrs. Sander he is not enthusiastic over, as it proves too soft.

A. F. Coolidge, of Cambridge, is busy with Boston ferns and bedding geraniums at his stall in the Boston Coöperative Market.

E. K. Farr, of Stoneham, is cutting fine Spencer sweet peas, and his Queen carnations with 24-inch stems are noteworthy.

The Montrose Greenhouses are having a heavy cut of Killarney, White Killarney, Ward and Richmond roses, which E. A. Stickel has no trouble in clearing out each day at the Boston Flower Exchange.

With the exception of forsythias, magnolias and a few spiræas, few shrubs are yet in flower here. A few days hence the ornamental plums and apples will be in flower.

Nelson & Johnson, of Framingham, have had excellent success this season with Pink Delight, Enchantress, White Enchantress and Beacon carnations.

A. A. Pembroke will erect a new Lord & Burnham house this season, 60 x 450. Sweet peas and carnations are Mr. Pembroke's specialties. He also grows vegetables quite heavily.

M. L. Tirrell, of Randolph, reports a good call for his well flowered Gladstone and astilboides spiræas.

H. W. Vose, of Hyde Park, is just finishing the season with bulbs, which have done exceptionally well with him.

W. W. Powers, of Nashua, N. H., has purchased a fine new automobile.

Edgar Bros., of Waverley, are cutting many of the finest sweet peas being handled now by the Flower Growers' Sales Co.

Harry F. Morton, previously on the Bayard Thayer estate, South Lancaster, is now in charge of R. M. Saltonstall's estate, Chestnut Hill, Mass.

Visitors last week included S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia; Messrs. Zirkman and Shoch, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, and G. Hampton, with H. F. Michell Co., of the same city.

April maintained its record of cool weather to the last. We have now had four months in 1912 with temperatures below the normal. Rainfall has been abundant and rarely has vegetation looked better.

Local nurseries will discontinue sending out deciduous trees and shrubs with the present week, but evergreens will be shipped for some time yet. They have had a tremendous rush of business of late.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The long continued, cool, rainy weather has shortened the supply of flowers to a degree that makes the cut flower market better than usual at this season of the year. The quality of much of the stock is excellent. The demand is fair; most of the business is done at moderate prices. There are no especial features worthy of recording beyond the continued activity in Beauties, an activity that affects only a little corner of the market; the fine quality of many of the carnations, and the close of the indoor lilac season with one of the two growers who supply this market. There are increased supplies of southern lilac and a diminution of the southern daffs. Easter lilies are still struggling under the burden of leftovers from Easter, while greens are not in as active demand as they have been for many weeks. There are still some outdoor bulbous flowers and a few from indoors, but these do not figure much in the returns. Sweet peas have had a particularly hard time during the rainy weather, a condition only relieved by the new crops now coming in that stand unfavorable conditions so much better than the wornout old chappies.

The Hydrangea and the Ivy.

There is a strong tendency today toward moving the home from the crowded city to the suburbs, the country, or by the sea. This tendency is of great benefit to the florists, because flowers are indispensable to the suburban, country or seashore home. For a long time the geranium, the coleus and the trailing vine formed the principal soft-wooded stock for this purpose. The flowering shrub, the climbing vine and the running rose formed the mainstays of the hardier ornamental section. Cultivation in taste and knowledge of the requirements have led to a broader field. Perhaps no two plants are more justly prized for this purpose than the hydrangea and the hardy English ivy.

A visit was paid one afternoon this week to the greenhouses owned and operated by J. William Colflesh's Sons at Fifty-third and Woodland avenue, West Philadelphia. The interest in this visit centered in the two varieties of plants named; both are being specialized by the Messrs. Colflesh. The hydrangea is being grown in successive crops, timed to bring them in bloom from now until late in the season. The last plants of the first or Easter crop are in full flower, their large heads of soft pink and pale blue testifying to cultural skill. The next crop is just coming in, the heads just showing color. Then follow successions of plants, from those with the flower buds well formed to the tiny floral pinhead and the shoot which experts knowingly discuss whether or not it will bear. The demand for these later plants is largely for the seashore, the places near the cities taking the earlier crop.

The possibilities of the hardy English ivy have been seen and improved by the Messrs. Colflesh. In one of their greenhouses are some twenty-five hanging baskets made up of Dracæna indivisa surrounded by hardy ivy, nasturtiums used as a temporary division completing the basket. These baskets are ordered for the roof garden of a prominent city hotel. The ivy will endure wind, sun and heat as nothing else. It is pinned here and there to the moss at the bottom of the basket, just to prevent its going wild, and is bound to make a telling effect throughout the season if given half a chance.

Various Notes.

The reception to President Taft at the Union League Club, April 27, occasioned handsome floral decorations. Between thirty and forty large wagonloads of plants, foliage and blooming (hydrangeas were especially conspicu-

Our Memorial Day Metallic Designs have always been in advance of the times, creating wonder and admiration among those who have never seen them before. This year we confidently predict that our Designs will surpass anything we have ever made.

We offer Wreaths of Foliage with roses, pansies, lilies-of-the-valley and forget-me-nots in a variety of combinations and styles; also Anchors, Pillows, Crosses, Gates Ajar, Harps, Lyres, and anything you desire.

If you have never seen our Memorial Day Designs, send us a small sample order; we know it will be a source of profit and pleasure to you—pleasure because it is always pleasant to make a profit.

Smith, Lineaweaver & Co. said, April 26, that pending the report of the subcommittee of operators and miners scheduled for May 2 it is difficult to form any opinion as to what will occur in anthracite coals. The bituminous sections everywhere are now at work, having made agreements with the mine workers for the next two years, but at an advance in wages, which increases the cost of mining bituminous coal from 5 cents to 10 cents a ton, and this means a consequent increase in the price of bituminous coal to the consumer. Shipments can now be made from practically all bituminous coal fields. Car supply and movement are good.

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

Business last week was exceptionally good, all things considered. Although the market is practically flooded with flowers, a larger amount of first-class stock, including roses and carnations, has never before been seen in the national capital. Carnations that should readily bring at least $4 per hundred have sold as low as $15 per thousand, and American Beauties with 5-foot stems brought a top price of 25 cents each; the bottom price was 5 cents. Sweet peas have been a little more plentiful and the supply slightly exceeded the demand. The prevailing prices ranged from $4 to $15 per thousand. Snapdragon, mignonette, pansies, forget-me-nots, marguerites and other indoor flowers are coming into the market in great profusion, but their sale has been much hampered, as have other products of the houses, by the influx of lilacs, dogwood and other wild flowers from the woods, where they are being gathered in large quantities. Huge bunches of these are being offered on the streets for 5 cents a bunch. It seems strange that this should be the case, as it was thought that the exceptionally cold weather last winter had killed all such outdoor stock, but the lilac that is now coming into the market can hardly be beaten, although it would be a whole lot better for the florists if it never materialized.

Orchids are selling much better than they have been and there has been a decided improvement in both quantity and quality. The supply about equals the demand and the prices are $6 to $9 per dozen. Violets are about over for this year, in both the single and double varieties; the only ones to be seen now are outdoor ones. Gardenias are still rather plentiful and prices do not seem to be improving, ranging as they do from 60 cents to $2 per dozen, with more offered near the former price than the latter.

Outdoor lily of the valley made its appearance about the middle of last week and has been selling for about $1.50 per hundred for the best. While this valley is not so pure a white as that from the greenhouses, in fragrance it excels by many points. Stephanotis is also to be seen in quantities and is a welcome addition for the commencement and bride bouquets, to say nothing of funeral work. The prevailing price is about $5 per hundred clusters. From the Spanish iris just coming in, it would appear as though this will be exceptionally fine this year.

Washington florists made possible many benefits for the children of the southwestern section of this city by their donations last week of carnations, which were sold by the teachers of the Smallwood public school. The flowers were placed on sale in a number of department stores where space was given the teachers, and the entire proceeds will be used in connection with the children's playgrounds.

The various associations of the city have agreed to observe Sunday, May 12, as Mothers' day. Appropriate sermons will be delivered in all the churches of the city and other features will mark the observance of the day. These men were slated to dispose of 10,000 grape vines at 5 cents each, the proceeds to go to them, but it can readily be seen how other goods would also be disposed of to the crowd that flocked to a store where there was an opportunity to come in contact with these much talked of men.

Gude Bros. have planned a great surprise for them, for while viewing the deserts of Arizona a large box of 6-foot American Beauties will be delivered to them, and similar boxes will keep them supplied until they reach their destination.

Business continues to hold strong and prices are satisfactory. There is a full supply of about everything seasonable, arbutus being in large quantities. ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There are hardly any new comments to make regarding the St. Louis cut flower market, as conditions remain about the same as last reported. There is nothing rushing among the retailers, though they say that business has been pretty steady all through the week in all departments, especially in funeral work.

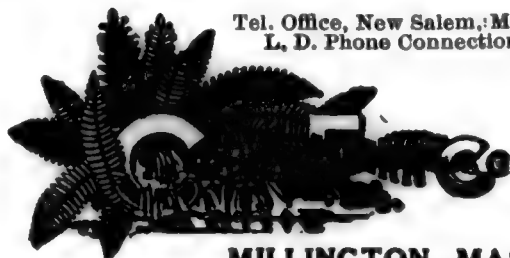

The wholesalers say that they had a good, steady call all the week for first-grade stock in roses and carnations. The second and third grades in these are more plentiful. There are more Killarneys in the market than any other rose at present. First-class long Beauties are none too numerous, but there seem to be a great many short ones. Carnations in all the leading varieties are fine and there are a few more of them than the demand calls for.

A fine lot of single and double lilac sold well. The home-grown stock has the call; the southern stock, arriving in plentiful, but callas are a glut; we have never seen so many in the market at one time and these go as low as $4 per hundred. Sweet peas, too, are fine and abundant and are again down to $2 per thousand in big lots. Valley is fine and there is plenty of it. Large quantities of mignonette, jonquils, daffodils, pansies, Spanish iris and snapdragon are also sent in daily.

The greenhouse men are having a hard time; there is plenty of planting to do, but the ground is too wet for such work.

Various Notes.

Samuel Seligman, better known as Sprinkleproof Sam, got a wet reception during his stay in this city, as it rained almost continuously. It is useless to mention whom he represents, as everybody knows Sam.

A. Miller, of A. Henderson & Co., Chicago, spent Friday of last week here on his way home from his Texas trip.

Albert Hirlemann, who recently leased the greenhouse plant of the Brix Floral Co., on Mead avenue, skipped town, and, according to Mr. Brix, had sold almost everything on the place, on which he held a mortgage. A warrant has been sworn out for his arrest. Mrs. Hirlemann, who was implicated in the transaction, has been arrested and will be held until her husband is found.

The Paris Floral Co. is doing a nice business at the new location, on Sixth street. Fred Foster, the head of the company, says they had the decorations for the Vandevorts' sixtieth anniversary, which amounted to nearly $1,000.

During the big rain and wind storm of Friday, April 26, considerable hail fell all over the city and county, but was not large enough to do any damage to glass. The high wind, however, damaged some of the fine trees in Forest and Tower Grove parks.

Joe Hauser, of Webster Groves, is cutting a fine lot of white and purple lilac, which has a good run in the local trade at the wholesale market. Mr. Hauser holds out good prospects for Jennemann's new violets, which he is growing.

The Engelmann Botanical Club will hold its regular meeting on Monday, May 13, at eight o'clock. George Pring, the secretary, says that a paper will be read which will be of great interest to all our members. Mr. Pring has charge of the big orchid houses at the Missouri Botanical Garden. He will again be the head bowler for the English cricket team this summer.

Do not forget the florists' dance on Wednesday night, May 8, at Westminster hall. The boys are working hard for its success, and, from the way the tickets are going, a good time is in store for all who attend.

Ammann will lead a discussion on "Relations of the Wholesaler, Grower and Retailer." Special notices will be sent out by the secretary, which will insure a large attendance of the three branches of the business.

Ray Young, son of Harry Young, of the firm of H. Young & Son, was in an automobile smash-up on Friday night, April 26. The machine he was driving belonged to his father and contained a load of young folks coming from an entertainment. No one was hurt, but the machine was damaged to the extent of $300.

A meeting of the executive board of the St. Louis Horticultural Society was held last week at the office of President Mallinckrodt, with all the officers and members of the board present. The meeting was called to discuss the question as to whether to continue or disband the society. On taking a vote, it was decided to disband and to pay back all dues for 1912 to any who had already paid them. All outstanding bills have been paid and the St. Louis Horticultural Society passes into history. Hence it goes without saying that no fall flower show will be given this year. Perhaps, after a few years' lay-off, the St. Louis Florists' Club may again take up the matter of holding a flower show.

RETUBBING BAYS AND PALMS.

I have some standard bay trees that need retubbing. I moved them two years ago into tubs that measure two feet in diameter. Can I comb the soil from them and put them back in the same tubs again without injuring them? I would rather do so than give them larger tubs. I also have some palms that need retubbing. Can I treat them in the same way as I propose treating the bays?

J. J. O.

The bay trees can be taken out of their tubs, if so desired, and the balls of earth can be carefully picked over with a sharp-pointed stick, loosening the roots but injuring them as little as possible. The tubs should be well cleaned out and dry when the plants are put back in them. Also see that the drainage is perfect. Plants retubbed as recently as two years ago should not be in urgent need of a shift. Probably if you loosened some of the surface soil, removed it and replaced with a rich top-dressing, it would answer equally well.

The palms in tubs which are in need of a shift should get it at once. Treat them similarly to the bays, using extreme care not to damage the roots. In repotting or retubbing palms, see that the soil is well packed around the sides. This cannot be accomplished by the hands alone. A potting stick or rammer must be used. C. W.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Committee Appointment.

President Richard Vincent, Jr., has appointed Charles J. Graham, Cleveland, O., chairman of the committee on sports.

Department of Plant Registration.

Public notice is hereby given that J. F. Anderson, Short Hills, N. J., offers for registration the following fern. Any person objecting to the registration, or to the use of the proposed name, is requested to communicate with the secretary at once. Failing to receive objection to the registration, the same will be made three weeks from this date.

Raiser's description—The fern named below has the variegated character observed in Pteris Cretica albo-lineata, but of more distinct variegation; the broad belt of white down the center of each leaflet occupies one-half of the breadth. The plant, however, is of taller, more compact habit and larger dimensions, the fertile fronds often reaching the height of two feet. All the leaflets, either barren or fertile, are undulated, terminating in crests of large dimensions, the crests heavier and larger, but most resembling the cristata form of Pteris Cretica Willsonii. The name which I wish to give to the above described is Pteris Cretica Andersonii.

John Young, Sec'y.

April 27, 1912.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.

Charles Burroughs, the East Adams street florist, is the proud possessor of a magnificent specimen of the old-fashioned peony, so familiar to the easterner. The plant is eighteen inches high and two feet in diameter. The plant now contains four immense blossoms. The flowers are perfect specimens and have attracted a great deal of attention in view of the fact that the flower is rare in this valley. The plant is 5 years old and this is the first year that Mr. Burroughs has been able to get a blossom. It is the only plant that grew out of twelve that Mr. Burroughs planted five years ago. This particular plant was the neglected one of the twelve and was practically abandoned a few years ago in a Bermuda patch. The other eleven, which were given careful cultivation, did not survive.

Spartanburg, S. C.—C. A. Moss advertises in the local paper that he is the largest grower and shipper of cut flowers in the Carolinas. He has greenhouses near Oakwood cemetery and city store with the Hill Piano Co.; near the Main street railroad crossing.

Eight Pages of Retailers' Cards

This department for the cards of Leading Retail Florists—those florists who have the facilities for filling the orders sent them by other florists—has made possible the recent rapid development of this branch of the business, a branch of the trade now established for all time and so helpful that its volume will keep on increasing for many years.

Are you sending and receiving your share of these orders? You can send your share (and make 20 per cent profit without effort) if you let your customers know you can perform this service for them. To receive your share—well, The Review's department for Retailers' cards remains the one way of getting prompt action on the order in hand.

To be represented costs only 70 cents per week on a yearly order. This is for one-inch space. Other spaces in proportion.

Why not send your order today—now—before you forget it?

The Market.

There are still great quantities of flowers being received daily in all lines. Carnations and roses are in heavy supply and it takes some hustling on the part of the wholesalers to move them out. Last week was good all around and the retailers were kept busy, and those that had business could get a fine grade of stock at low prices. The week ended with the carnations all cleaned up and the roses down to a point where there was no cause for worry about their cleaning up Sunday morning. This market seems to have more short roses than any other grade, and it is surprising, considering the amount of stock grown and the trade calling for better grades right along, that some of the rose growers do not produce some longer stock. Sweet peas are arriving in grand shape and are popular. There is a steady call for these and Friday, Saturday and Sunday it seemed that every lady in the city wore a corsage, either of roses, peas or short Beauties. This is certainly pleasing to the florists here, as they have worked hard to get the people into this habit and it seems as though they have succeeded.

Tulips, daffs and hyacinths are a glut in the market, as are Easter and calla lilies. There is little or no demand for these, and we all hope that there will be a change soon. Spanish iris is in heavy supply and not selling any too well. Valley is being cleaned up nicely and there is just enough to go around. Smilax is in the same condition and there is no trouble selling what is coming in. Fancy ferns are in heavy demand and there is some fine stock being shipped out by the large fern dealers.

Monday, April 29, the weather was bad, as we had a heavy rain storm change hands. The firm name will be the Klagge Co., consisting of Robert Klagge and his son Herman, of Mount Clemens, and Robert Klagge's brother, Herman, who has been in the employ of J. Breitmeyer's Sons for thirty years. Herman Klagge and his nephew will be the active managers and the name of The Flower Shop will be retained. Herman Klagge is well known to the flower buying public and their success is already assured. The elder Herman Klagge will not give up his position with Breitmeyer until May 15.

ROCHESTER.

The Market.

The thermometer has gone up considerably within the last two weeks and we are now having spring weather again. In the wholesale market there is an overabundance of all kinds of cut flowers; yet the supply is kept moving and no great glut has been experienced as yet. In the retail stores business is good and the demand for flowers is heavy. Carnations and roses are cheap. The demand for funeral flowers is on the increase rather than diminishing, and is the heaviest it has been in some months.

There is a great dearth of flowering plants, which has been felt ever since Easter, and there is no immediate prospect of a remedy for it. Hydrangeas, rambler roses and a few late azaleas are the extent of the list to choose from.

Beauties are scarce once more and go at fancy prices. Other roses are all good when they come in, but soon show the effects of the warmer weather. Sweet peas are pouring into the market in great shape. Snapdragon, mignonette, marguerites and lilacs have come to add variety to the spring flower list.

The seed and nursery business is in full swing. The first weeks of spring were too cold to permit much planting; consequently there is a big rush now to get things in. All nurserymen and seedsmen seem to be exceedingly busy filling orders. The landscape men are also hustling, since all outdoor work has been retarded about four weeks.

The pure food show has come to a close and some of the florists will miss the trade it furnished during the last two weeks, though it was not specially heavy. All florists are looking forward to Mothers' day, for an increase in trade is expected then. Preparations are also being made for Memorial day.

Various Notes.

pointed a park commissioner to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Stephen G. Hollister.

Mrs. Felix Alberts is expected home

"How to Make a Good Lawn," at the May meeting of the Florists' Association.

V. Morgan, of Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J., called on the trade last week.

J. B. Keller Sons had a most unique window display in memory of the lost Titanic, which drew large crowds. It consisted of the American and British flags, draped side by side, with a huge wreath of magnolia leaves and Easter lilies in one corner of the window, and in the other a large picture of the lost ocean liner. Two large baskets of Easter lilies formed the background for the picture.

Many nurseries in this city take advantage of the parcels post to send stock abroad by mail, and the provision that it must first be inspected will cause considerable inconvenience in preparing it for shipment. Inspectors from either the national or state agricultural departments must put their seal of approval on the goods before Uncle Sam will take them abroad.

Harry P. Neun is running his new auto delivery, which saves a great deal of time in putting out orders.

John Dunbar reports that the work on the city parks is well under way. A large number of improvements are being made this year.

The gifts of flowers sent to the special car of the Shriners, who left here April 28 for Los Angeles, to attend their annual convention, were handsome indeed. J. M. Keller could not go with the party, because of the rush of spring work.

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

LOS ANGELES and other Pacific coast readers will be specially interested in the illustration of the new store of W. J. Wolters on another page of this issue.

If you mail plants you should attach an inspection certificate or the postmaster is likely to refuse them admission to the mails. See the Nursery Department of this week's issue.

Santa Cruz, Cal.—Carl Purdy, of Ukiah, Cal., delivered a lecture on the beautification of small cities here April 20, under the auspices of the local Chamber of Commerce. For the suppression of weeds on vacant lots he suggested the killing of the weeds by fall cultivation followed by the planting of the strong growing native wild flowers, which, if given favorable conditions, would smother the young weeds. He advised sowing the wild flower seeds broadcast, rather thinly, and as many of these seeds are very small he suggested first mixing them with soil to insure equal distribution. As the result of this lecture arrangements are being made for a competition among the residents for prizes for the best kept gardens, etc.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Market.

Fiesta week and the visit of the Shriners, which begins May 4, are already causing inquiries for stock and retailers are on the anxious seat. To judge by present appearances, there is going to be plenty of outdoor stock, but good indoor roses will probably be none too plentiful. There are inquiries for Beauties in quantity, also for long-stemmed reds and pinks of all varieties. Retailers who have been left on previous occasions are also looking ahead to Decoration day, and wholesalers report good bookings already.

Just now funeral work forms the bulk of the trade and flowers of the better grades are not selling any too well. Outdoor stock, on the other hand, is cleaning up well and growers are getting good returns. Some of the best outdoor roses ever seen on this market are being handled now by the wholesalers; large, well colored Ulrich Bruners, fine Maman Cochet and White Cochet being among the offerings. There is plenty of carnation and bulb stock, valley and irises, as well as coreopsis, forget-me-nots and the various garden or summer flowers. Gladioli are not plentiful yet, though there is considerable variety and the flowers offered are good. Orchids are a little more plentiful, but not first-rate in quality. In greens, smilax continues the shortest item, but it is more plentiful than it was a few weeks ago.

Various Notes.

Howard E. Gates, son of Mrs. Cornelia R. Gates, of the Floral Nursery, Anaheim, was in town last week, taking a look around among the growers and the trade generally. He says that business has picked up well since the rains. Miss Kate Sessions, of San Diego, paid a flying visit to the trade recently, taking in the various places at Montebello, including Howard & Smith's and Dieterich & Turner's. Miss Sessions expressed herself as greatly pleased with the new Red Cherokee rose at the latter place.

"Everybody's doing it." Frank Lichtenberg is the latest to fall for the auto to date and he will find his new machine mighty useful. Business keeps up remarkably well at the store on Fifth street, and when I called some extra fine yellow irises were being tastefully arranged with their own foliage, in baskets, for an order.

S. Murata has heavy bookings for cut flowers for the Shriners' visit. These include practically all lines, but the call has been heaviest on sweet peas, carnations and centaureas.

When it comes to greens, Tassano Bros. certainly come near the top. Tony says he will handle an immense amount of smilax, asparagus and other garlands for the conclave. They are also heavily stocked on California green moss, a useful article just now, considering the sphagnum scarcity.

The H. N. Gage Co. will be well supplied with Sprenger for the coming festivities. The stock is extra long and select, and big cuts arrive daily from the Signal Hill ranch.

the stable after the horse is gone, the new cash register at Morris Goldenson's is certainly a magnificent one and an ornament to the store. It has all the latest appliances and improvements, and apparently will do everything but make up funeral designs. Gordon, Garbett & Co. still attend to that end of the business and it keeps them lively.

Orders for decorated floats for the parade seem to be fairly well divided up among the principal retailers.

H. Reeve Darling is well pleased with the way business is coming to the Hayward Floral Co., on Sixth street, and a good deal of credit is due to him and his clever staff of decorators. Some of the best Ulrich Brunner roses seen here for a long time have been displayed at this store the last few weeks.

Since Mr. Creutz has taken to riding a Thor motorcycle he is a hard man to catch. He says he will be well prepared with all classes of stock for Memorial day.

Dieterich & Turner have purchased another sixteen acres of land adjoining their plant at Montebello, and this gives them the entire northwest corner of the Montebello tract, thirty-three acres in all. Choice Cocos plumosa and C. flexuosa, six to eight feet high and showing fine character leaves, are being sold from land that three years ago was a barley field. Always something doing at "Heisse Luft," even when business is quiet in cut roses.

John Morley, superintendent of the San Diego city parks; C. E. Lilley, Santa Cruz, and E. W. McLellan, of San Francisco, were among the visitors to the city this week.

H. R. Richards.

TACOMA, WASH.

The Market.

Weather conditions in this vicinity have lately been of the best for the growing of all florists' stock, both in the greenhouses and outdoors. Tulips, etc., are in full bloom on the lawns, and many of the earlier varieties of shrubs are beginning to bloom.

Carnations are less plentiful again and are holding up to good prices. The glut of a few weeks ago did not last long, as many of the growers dumped their old plants to make room for bedding stock. A number of them, however, put in cucumbers, tomatoes, lettuce, etc. The vegetable market is now in about the same condition that the carnation market was in two months ago. Violets are about past and roses are more plentiful, with the quality much improved. The nursery trade is about over and most of the dealers report a good business along this line.

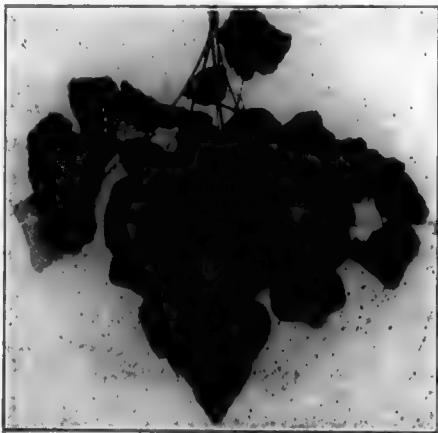

Various Notes.

Henry Benthien and George Seaverns made the trip to Bellingham last week, to inspect the bulb farm at the United States experiment station. They report everything in splendid condition. There seems to be a great future for this industry on Puget Sound, as the climate appears to be well adapted to bulb growing.

Van Slyke & Seamons are bringing in a fine lot of Spanish iris and gladioli. The Northwestern Floral Co. has an excellent lot of bedding stock ready for the spring sales.

surprise when about fifty of the ladies invaded the club rooms. The meeting was quickly adjourned, the ladies taking charge, and we were treated to an entertainment, after which refreshments were served. — J. L. S.

STOCKTON, CAL.

The San Joaquin Floral Co., of this city, has opened a new, up-to-date store on Sutter street. This firm also has enlarged its nursery by leasing several adjoining lots. Mr. Star, the manager, has purchased a fine delivery automobile and also a car for his private use.

The San Francisco Floral Co. has opened a store on East Main street.

F. Mindach, heretofore a gardener in one of the city parks, has been appointed head gardener of the park system. S. & D.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Business has been fair for the last week. Carnations of good quality are selling well, as there are none too many of these coming in. Some stock of poor quality, however, is hardly salable. The only harm it does is to militate against the price of good flowers. It is about time for some discrimination to be shown in the prices of carnations charged by the growers. At present the prices run the same for good and poor stock. Of course the grower with good flowers can nearly always sell his, while it is sometimes hard to dispose of poor flowers. Roses are fairly plentiful, some first-class local stock selling well. Violets are almost over for the season and bulb stock is getting scarce.

The sale for bedding plants is brisk. Geraniums are not overplentiful this year and good plants are bringing fair prices. Pansies, daisies, myosotis, etc., are selling for less than in former years. T. W.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are still having a succession of beautiful April days, with a shower or two thrown in occasionally to give a little variety. Everything is moving nicely, with the exception of business, which is quiet. We expected that there would be quite a stir when Lent was over, but, on the contrary, there is little doing. This is partly to be looked for when there is such a quantity of stock brought into town as we have seen for the last three weeks.

Roses and carnations seem to have been hit the hardest by the decline in rates. Of the latter it is quite useless to pretend to give prices. Tulips are holding their own again, as the beds are getting on toward the last picking. Valley and lilies are at a standstill. Violets are about over. Sweet peas are cheaper and better. Some Dutch hyacinths are seen. Spanish irises are cheap and good, but move slowly. Outside stock of various kinds is plentiful

STOCK FOR EXPOSITION.

Will you kindly give us your opinion concerning the nursery business of "the exposition city"? We are going to have the P. P. I. exposition in San Francisco in 1915, as you know. What variety is the most profitable stock, both outdoors and under glass? Is there any stock that should be started now? The local papers tell us the exposition will start February 20 and end December 4. G. N.

I take it that G. N. intends to grow stock of some sort for the coming San Francisco exposition, which is yet about three years in the future. As the range of possibilities is almost endless, should he decide to cater to the demand for outside grown ornamentals, it is difficult to know where to begin to advise, unless he would be more definite as to the amount of land he has at his disposal and as to what department of horticulture he is most interested in. As he also fails to state whether he is inclined to the growing of cut flowers or of pot plants under glass, it is rather hard to give definite suggestions.

From my knowledge of what the local growers are doing in the plant line, it might be well to remark that there will be no excess of well grown ferns, palms, begonias, dracenas, crotons, ericas, or any showy stove plants. It is the general observation that most of the smaller growers are content to follow the old beaten paths and stay with the carnations, roses, valley and lilies, and only a few take the somewhat slower road to fame by producing splendid house plants, of which up to this time there has never been half the amount required for sale in the market. Those who have broken away from the old standbys have all made considerable money, and if G. N. wishes to follow suit and has sufficient experience and can afford to wait a season or two for returns, he can make no mistake in growing the lines of stock suggested. G.

MAY 30
THE BIG DAY!

In the last few years Decoration Day has become the big day in the flower business. Practically every florist can, if he tries, sell more flowers May 29 and 30 than in any other two days in the year. And it is fine business. Flowers are plentiful and cheap, so that there is a good margin of profit. Also, the customer usually takes the flowers along, so there is no expense for delivery. That adds a whole lot to the profit.

The Peony is the special Decoration Day flower. It makes the biggest show for the money. Also it is the most reliable shipper; you can be sure your Peonies will reach you in fine condition, that they will not go to sleep on your hands and that they will give your customers satisfaction.

Kennicott's is the Peony house. It was our exploitation of the Peony that made the Peony and the Decoration Day business what it is today. We handle more Peonies than any other house in America. For Decoration Day we ship them from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard and to the Pacific coast.

Now booking orders. The stock this year promises to be the finest ever, and with the many thousands of plants we own or control we are assured many thousands of dozens, even with the light crops the growers all report.

The finest, $8.00 per 100; medium, $5.00 to $6.00 per 100; good stock, $4.00 per 100.

FIRE did $10,000 damage, April 25, to the building occupied by the Leifer Seed Co., at Little Rock, Ark.

J. FRANK CORREY, vine seed grower at Enid, Okla., now does business as the Oklahoma Seed Growers' Co.

THE government seeds were put up this year at $1.09½ per thousand packets, by the Robert Gair Co., Brooklyn.

THE trouble now is to wait on the customers that line the counters three deep. The mail orders are pretty well caught up with.

THE call for gladioli and some other spring bulbs does not appear to come quite up to the sanguine expectations of some of the houses. Inducements are being made to clear.

THE newer mail order seed houses in the middle west, which get most of their business from west of the Mississippi, have done a remarkable business this season, and it is holding up extremely well.

IN its new location on the direct thoroughfare to two great railroad stations the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, has had a tremendous increase in its counter sales. The problem is to handle the trade.

THE onion sets at Louisville have gone into the ground about as usual. Chilli-cothe is a little behind and at Chicago planting is considerably delayed, with the prospect of some reduction in acreage.

THE firm of Julius Loewith, 99 Nassau street, New York city, representative of prominent European seed houses, is known, since May 1, as Loewith, Larsen & Co., with new headquarters at 150 Nassau street, New York.

THE United States Department of Agriculture recently has issued a bulletin, No. 488, entitled, "Diseases of Cabbage and Related Crops, and Their Control," by L. L. Harter, which will be of interest to seedsmen.

WHOLESALE seedsmen are having their troubles with reorders. Though there are seeds for sale, so many items were short at the beginning of the season that now it is not only impossible to supply the items most called for but difficult to furnish "something just as good."

ONCE more come pessimistic reports from the pea districts: Season late, soil too wet to get on it, planting not possible until after the usual date, midsummer heat will catch the vines at the most critical stage. To hear them tell it, one would think the pea is about to drop out of cultivation.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; First Vice-Pres., M. H. Duryea, New York City; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.
Thirtieth annual convention, Chicago, June 25 to 27, 1912.

FIRE did $10,000 damage, April 25, to the building occupied by the Leifer Seed Co., at Little Rock, Ark.

J. FRANK CORRY, vine seed grower at Enid, Okla., now does business as the Oklahoma Seed Growers' Co.

THE government seeds were put up this year at $1.09½ per thousand packets, by the Robert Gair Co., Brooklyn.

THE trouble now is to wait on the customers that line the counters three deep. The mail orders are pretty well caught up with.

THE call for gladioli and some other spring bulbs does not appear to come quite up to the sanguine expectations of some of the houses. Inducements are being made to clear.

THE newer mail order seed houses in the middle west, which get most of their business from west of the Mississippi, have done a remarkable business this season, and it is holding up extremely well.

IN its new location on the direct thoroughfare to two great railroad stations the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, has had a tremendous increase in its counter sales. The problem is to handle the trade.

THE onion sets at Louisville have gone into the ground about as usual. Chilli-cothe is a little behind and at Chicago planting is considerably delayed, with the prospect of some reduction in acreage.

THE firm of Julius Loewith, 99 Nassau street, New York city, representative of prominent European seed houses, is known, since May 1, as Loewith, Larsen & Co., with new headquarters at 150 Nassau street, New York.

THE United States Department of Agriculture recently has issued a bulletin, No. 488, entitled, "Diseases of Cabbage and Related Crops, and Their Control," by L. L. Harter, which will be of interest to seedsmen.

WHOLESALE seedsmen are having their troubles with reorders. Though there are seeds for sale, so many items were short at the beginning of the season that now it is not only impossible to supply the items most called for but difficult to furnish "something just as good."

ONCE more come pessimistic reports from the pea districts: Season late, soil too wet to get on it, planting not possible until after the usual date, midsummer heat will catch the vines at the most critical stage. To hear them tell it, one would think the pea is about to drop out of cultivation.

TRANSPARENT ENVELOPES.

The subject of transparent envelopes for seeds has again been brought to the front by order No. 6258, recently issued by the Postmaster General, amending the Postal Laws and Regulations. The attention of all postmasters is called has "distinctiveness" stamped all over it; it will not only revolutionize the family of garden Gladiolus but will be one of the most important factors in commercial floriculture. The type is distinctively new. Broad-expanded, wide-open flowers, paired by twos, face all in the same direction, and are carried on straight, stout stalks never less than 3½ ft. in height. From four to eight flowers are open at one time. The form: each petal is exquisitely ruffled and fluted at the edges, such as is only noticeable in Orchids. It gives the flower a refined appearance, and it appeals instantly to the fancier. The color is delicate cream-pink with a neat, attractive crimson stripe in the center of each lower petal. The shade of pink is unknown in Gladioli. 10 cts. each, $1.00 per doz., $7.50 per 100, $70.00 per 1000.

MISCELLANEOUS BULBS, &C.

LYCORIS SQUAMIGERA, or AMARYLLIS HALLII (The Magic Lily of Japan)

A perfectly hardy Amaryllis, producing beautiful pink flowers. One of the hardy Amaryllis never widely introduced and almost lost to floriculture. Lycoris squamigera produces in early Spring foliage which grows until July, when it ripens off and disappears, and one not familiar with its habits would think the bulb had died, but about a month later, as if by magic, the flower-stalks spring from the ground to a height of 2 or 3 feet, developing an umbel of large and beautiful lily-shaped flowers 3 to 4 inches across and from eight to twelve in number, of a delicate lilac-pink.

As the bulb is perfectly hardy without any protection it can be planted either in the fall or spring. Cover the crown about 4 inches. Very useful for cut flowers in the summer.

Strong blooming bulbs, 10 cts. each, $1.00 per doz., $6.50 per 100

CALLAS, SPOTTED LEAF (Richardia Albo-Maculata)

Very free summer-blooming variety. $2.25 per 100, $20.00 per 1000

The flowers are of a very large size, like an Amaryllis, novel form and of snowy whiteness, and are also exceedingly fragrant. Bulbs are large and strong and begin to flower in two or three weeks after planting; a fine florists' flower. $1.00 per doz., $7.50 per 100.

IRIS PALLIDA DALMATICA

This is the grandest variety of all the German Iris. Color deep, clear lavender, very large, flowers sweet-scented. This Iris should be planted largely where cut flowers are in demand, as it is certainly the best of its class. A grand variety for massing in borders; it is superb. $1.50 per doz., $12.00 per 100.

AZALEA MOLLIS

Most attractive in the shrubbery; also extensively forced on account of the brilliancy of colors. 15 buds, 15 inches high, $4.50 per doz., $35.00 per 100.

to these regulations covering articles of the fourth class not absolutely excluded from the mails. Paragraph 5 deals with seeds and is as follows:

"5. Seeds or other articles not prohibited, which are liable, from their form or nature, to loss or damage, unless specially protected, must be put up in sealed envelopes made out of material sufficiently transparent to show the contents clearly without opening."

SEEDS IN THE WEST.

The Nebraska Seed Co., Omaha, is this year old enough to vote; it was organized in 1891 by the same men who still are at the helm. The start was with a floor space 44x60, but now a building is occupied with six floors 66x132. It has a capacity of 180 cars storage. The seed cleaning plant has a capacity of 100,000 pounds of rough seed a day. The staff consists of forty-one inside men and eight travelers. One of the important departments of the business is the growing of alfalfa for seeds; also the company loaded the thirty-fourth car of timothy to be sent out this season. In Douglas county, Nebraska, the company also grows from 40,000 to 50,000 bushels of onion sets.

LOS ANGELES SEED NOTES.

The retail seed men are extremely busy, and probably never in the history of the trade has there been a better season. Even during the dry spell early in the year, about a normal business was done, but since the rains the rush has been surprising even to the most optimistic. Climatic conditions have been so favorable the last few weeks that practically all crops will be normal, at least with the important exception of sweet peas, which were not sufficiently forward to get the full benefit of the rain and which have also been retarded by cold at night. Blight has already attacked some plantings, and experienced growers, while not taking a dark view of the case, fear that this will be more apparent later in the season. The stands of beet, lettuce, roots generally, and staple vegetable and flower seeds are reported as excellent, and as the ground has plenty of moisture below and a fine tilth on the surface, all hope for the best.

The Aggeler & Musser Seed Co. has had a most unpleasant experience with two of its hitherto trusted employees. The firm sent these men out on salary and provided them with conveyances to call on customers for orders. Only a small percentage of the orders taken were turned in to the house; others, and these the more profitable, were diverted to another house on a commission basis. The Aggeler & Musser Co. reports a heavy trade in all lines and says the reports from their growers are quite encouraging.

ARCHIAS SEED STORE, Box 53, Sedalia, Mo.

Stephen Girard, one of the greatest real philanthropists the world has ever known, once said, "If I knew I would die tomorrow I would plant a flower today." Girard was a poor one-eyed boy, kicked and cuffed about as cabin boy, sailor, ship owner, etc., known chiefly in Philadelphia, where he first kept a store on Water Street. Later on in the process of trading he became very rich. It was Girard who took One Million Dollars from the Bank of Barings Brothers in London and invested it in shares in the United States Bank, during the panic of 1810, saving the day. Later he bought the whole bank and established the Bank of Stephen Girard. He founded the Girard College in Philadelphia, and endowed it. It is a school for homeless boys, regardless of religion. In fact religion is regarded there as antique and obsolete philosophy, and ministers and priests are not permitted within the gates. The boys are taught to be free thinkers—their religion is that of the heart. But what has all this to do with bulbs? Just this—that all great men are flower-lovers—they are close to nature. In other words they are educated. That's what florists must do—educate the people—advertise flowers persistently—handle flowers of good quality, that are a credit to the business. For good lilies you must have Horseshoe Brand Bulbs. Best produced in the world. Send for the Book of Bulbology.

Theodore Payne reports a good retail business and says that considerable interest is being taken in California wild flower and tree seeds, on which subject he is an expert.

The Germain Seed & Plant Co. has had to move a considerable portion of its stock from the nursery at Tenth and Hope streets and a successful auction sale was held there April 24. The firm figures on going farther out and is on the lookout for suitable land as near the city as possible. On Sunday, April 21, the staff from the store was taken for a round trip and picnic to Montebello, which was much enjoyed by all. The firm's autos, and other machines hired for the purpose, were used. H. R. R.

SWEET CORN FOR SEED.

The location and character of soil are of less importance in the production of seed corn from which the best results may be expected than that the fields be so situated as to avoid as far as possible liability to mixture through the pollen. This is a far more common cause of inferior quality than is generally supposed. Seed growers object to growing Black Mexican corn because they say it crosses so freely with other sorts. There is no evidence, however, that this variety crosses more readily than others, but when crosses of Black Mexican and other varieties do occur the effects are more readily seen. Instances are known where Moore's Concord was evidently crossed with Black Mexican corn growing nearly two miles away; but in another case, where the Black Mexican and the Moore's Concord varieties were planted side by side on the same day, there was no indication of mixture beyond the sixth row from the dividing line.

Corn pollen in abundance has been obtained from the plumage of a black-bird, which must have flown between four and six miles from the last field of corn visited, and doubtless others of the large flock to which the bird belonged carried equal quantities of pollen, more or less of which they must have scattered in the field of seed sweet corn in which they alighted.

Difference in season of maturity is not always a protection against crossing. The writer knows of a case in which there was clear evidence of mixture in both directions between Extra Early Red Cory and Stowell's Evergreen corn growing side by side, although the Cory was planted some days before the Evergreen, but in another instance there was no sign of mixture between the Cory and the Black Mexican varieties planted side by side on the same day, all of the silk and the tassels of the Cory being ripe and dry before even the earliest tassel appeared on the Black Mexican, and in this case there were no late-blooming suckers on the Cory to furnish pollen for the earliest Black Mexican plants.

In another instance, where two sorts of corn were separated by a thick grove of tall trees about four rods wide, there was no sign of mixture, but just beyond the grove, where the lots of corn were separated by an equal width of grass land, there was abundant evidence of crossing.

In another case, where two sorts were

Owing to the backward season in California, all Winter and late Sweet Pea Seed will be late in maturing. To avoid late deliveries, I will send all early orders of Winter Sweet Pea Seed directly from our ranch in Lompoc, Cal. These will reach my farthest customers not later than August 10th, saving over four weeks' time. Send all letters of importance to Lompoc, Cal. We will have all the leading colors and many novelties. Orders booked now. New complete list will be sent out in May.

Mt. Airy, Md., Feb. 26, 1912.

Dear Sir:—We have been cutting very fine peas this season from your stock. Stems 18 and 20 inches, with 3, 4 and 5 flowers, and in several instances with 6 flowers to a stem. You deserve and receive great honor from the trade for bringing Winter flowering Sweet Peas to their present high position in the market. You have already done more for the florist than the great Burbank will ever do.

We have also only the best Spencer and Unwin late Sweet Pea Seed on hand now, also other Florists' flower seed. Send for list.

separated by a thick osage hedge not over twelve feet high, there was no indication of crossing within eight or ten rods of the hedge, while beyond that distance there were many crosses.

Experience shows that neither a distance less than several miles nor any varietal difference can be relied upon as a certain protection against a mixture of pollen. In most farming regions it is impracticable to locate a field of seed corn so as to guarantee that there shall be no mixture through pollen, though much can be done to lessen the probability of a mixture. How this may be best accomplished is a different problem in each case. Usually the most practical way is to plant each lot of seed as far as possible from any other corn, and also to have as much difference as possible in the dates of ripening of the seed corn and of the corn in the nearest field.

Fortunately, the effect of crossing in corn is rarely masked for a number of generations, as it often is in leguminous plants. It frequently shows so plainly in the grain which is the immediate result of the cross that much of the hybrid corn can be removed by careful sorting before shelling, and it is well to throw out the whole ear rather than to pick out the mixed grain, as is the common practice, because crossing does not always change the appearance of the grain the first season, and there is a strong probability that on an ear on which crossed grains are visible there are other crossed grains which show no external sign of mixture.

In a general way the fertilization and preparation of the soil and the methods of culture which will give the best results with field corn will be equally effective with sweet corn, but because of liability to crossing with volunteer plants it is important that a crop for seed corn should not follow one of any other variety of corn and that care should be taken to prevent bringing into the field viable grains of corn and spores of corn smut or other corn diseases in stable manure or by stock.

NURSERY NEWS.AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1911-12: Pres., J. H. Dayton, Fainesville, O.; Vice-pres., W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-seventh annual meeting, Boston, June 1912.

J. H. SMITH is preparing to establish a nursery at Citrus Heights, near Sacramento, Cal.

THE landscape departments of the big nurseries are finding fully as many prospects as they can develop properly.

THE city council of Kalispell, Mont., has authorized Alderman H. B. Dick to lease several blocks of ground for the site of the proposed municipal nursery.

R. H. WILSON, who has been engaged in the nursery business at Monrovia, Cal., has bought two adjoining tracts at Oceanside, Cal., and will establish a nursery there.

SOME of the fruit tree nurseries are not especially enthusiastic, but the ones that specialize on ornamentals are reporting a steadily increasing demand, better this season than ever.

THE incorporation is announced of Engle Bros. Co., San Benito, Tex., with $20,000 capital stock, for "seed tree growing." The incorporators are Philip Engle, Max Engle and Mrs. Sallie Engle.

THE nursery season, over a large and important part of the country, is turning out one of the shortest and busiest on record. It emphasizes the importance of proper facilities for winter storage and the advantage gained by pushing the business for autumn.

THE Northwest Horticulturist, published at Tacoma, Wash., is authority for the statement that P. A. Dix, president of the Pacific Coast Nurserymen's Association, expects to have at least one Pullman carload of coast nurserymen for the Boston convention of the A. A. N. June 12 to 14.

M. KOSTER, of Koster & Sons, Boskoop, Holland, has just spent several days in Chicago and vicinity. He is a graduate of Oxford, widely traveled and an interesting talker on general as well as trade topics. He says the American market for Holland nursery stock never was so broad as now and that the buyers this year are more willing to pay the prices of larger stock and better grades.

FEDERAL LEGISLATION.

In reply to a request for a statement as to the present status of the bill before Congress to establish a federal quarantine against nursery stock, under certain conditions, Wm. Pitkin, chairman of the legislative committee of the

Dreer's Select Potted Roses

SELECT TWO-YEAR-OLD STOCK FOR YOUR RETAIL TRADE

The Roses which we here offer are, with few exceptions, field grown stock either American grown or plants that have been imported from England and Ireland. These plants are all potted up during December and January, stored in cold houses, so that they break away naturally in spring, making this the best possible stock for selling to the retail customer. The prices noted are for strong plants, in 5 and 6-inch pots, according to the growth of the variety.

American Association of Nurserymen, wrote as follows April 27:

"There is nothing new or definite to report in regard to the matter of federal inspection legislation. Some two months ago our committee and the Department of Agriculture came to an agreement on the points of difference, and we supposed that the bill would go through. It has, however, been held up in the House for several reasons, and later bills have been introduced, so that today we hardly know what the situation is. It begins to look, however, as though it would be difficult to get through any legislation this session on account of the short time remaining."

PLANTS IN THE MAILS.

Those who do a mailing business in plants of any character will do well to see that every package, no matter what its size or contents, carries the state inspection certificate. Otherwise, where the postmaster observes the regulations, the package is likely to be refused transportation in the mails. As a matter of fact, the regulation recently promulgated by the Postmaster General applies only to plants "which may carry injurious insects," but how is the postmaster to know? To be on the safe side, the inspection certificate should be attached.

The new ruling, which already has caused some confusion, is in order No. 6158, recently promulgated by the Postmaster General, amending the Postal Laws and Regulations with regard to articles of the fourth class not absolutely excluded from the mails. Paragraph 8 of the order is as follows:

"Nursery stock, including field-grown florists' stock; trees, shrubs, plants, vines, cuttings, grafts, scions and buds (which may carry injurious insects), may be admitted to the mails only when accompanied by a certificate from a state or government inspector to the effect that said nursery stock has been inspected and found free from injurious insects."

WITH ILLINOIS NURSERIES.

The spring packing season of the nurseries at Bloomington, Ill., is rapidly drawing to a close and growers of nursery stock are now devoting their time and attention to planting new stock. The pack this season has been one of the largest for several years, there being a great demand for all kinds of trees and shrubbery. Fruit trees have been in great demand, and ornamental trees and shrubbery as well as smaller fruit plants have been shipped out in great quantities.

B. J. Vandervoort, of the Corn Belt nursery, stated April 23 that local nurseries are putting out many acres of plants in anticipation of future business and it will take a couple of weeks' time yet before this work will have been completed. Mr. Vandervoort states that the peach crop in the majority of instances has been killed, as the past winter was a prolonged one and the weather was extremely cold. The trees went into the winter season rather green and were therefore more susceptible to the frost. The plums are damaged to some extent, but according to Mr. Vandervoort the apples, cherries and the more hardy fruits are unhurt. Strawberries may suffer to some extent, by reason of the frost that was in the ground.

THE E. G. HILL CO., RICHMOND, INDIANA

OYSTER BAY, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Oyster Bay Horticultural Society was held in the Board of Trade rooms April 19, with President Duthie in the chair.

Sixteen new members were enrolled as charter members.

The committee on by-laws reported having prepared a set of them; these were read, adopted without change and ordered printed. The trustees of the Board of Trade submitted an offer of the use of the rooms, which was accepted. The committee was instructed to draw up a schedule for a summer show and report at the next meeting.

Mrs. E. M. Townsend wished to donate vegetable and flower seeds to any of the high school children who may want them, and also $15 to be divided into two prizes for the best kept garden, for cottagers. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mrs. Townsend for her kind donations.

John Miller, Laurelton Hall, showed a fine specimen calceolaria, which was awarded a cultural certificate.

Alfred Lahodney, superintendent for Mr. Havemeyer, Brookville, offered a bronze medal to the gardener getting most points at the next meeting. James Duthie offered a gold medal to the gardener getting most points for the year at the monthly meetings. Votes of thanks were accorded to both gentlemen for their generous donations.

J. T. I.

LEBANON, PA.

Christian C. Yost, the South Sixth street florist, has bought of Dr. A. B. Gloninger and other heirs a tract of four acres on South Tenth street, just south of the Cornwall railroad. The tract lies south of the William Kalbach Linden Hill residence and orchard, north of James P. Gates' fine suburban place, and east of J. H. Greiner and P. S. Keiser's South Twelfth Street Heights. Mr. Yost will remove his plant from South Sixth street by degrees until his entire range and his home are located on the newly purchased tract. He will erect a number of new greenhouses, one of them to be 300 feet in length. The new location for his plant is only a few steps from the line of the Lebanon and Campbelltown street railway.

WE still have several thousand Light Pink and Rose-pink Enchantress cuttings, grown by one of the best, if not the best carnation grower in this part of the country.

JOLIET, ILLINOIS

ALVIN, TEX.

The cape jasmine shippers feel that they are face to face with another unfavorable season, the third in succession. The cape jasmine is about the only item on which florists here do any considerable business outside of their local trade. Many look to the crop for their year's profit and any untoward circumstances have a greater importance than most of those in the trade realize.

Of course the best demand for the cape jasmine buds is for Memorial day, May 30. The crop, when it is too early, as frequently has been the case, never realizes anything like what it does when it comes in just right for the Memorial day special demand—then it is shipped to florists all over the United States, who, because they have a ready sale, are willing to pay fair prices. But this year the crop bids fair to be too late for Memorial day—it looks as though it might not move in any quantity until June. If this fear is realized the market value of the crop is problematical, but surely it will be greatly reduced by coming in competition with the peony and other flowers that are then in season. The growers here are hoping for steady, warm, bright weather to bring the crop along. The plants never were in finer condition, although the season is one of the latest in many years.

Cantril, Ia.—A. Troth, who is a veteran plantsman, has his greenhouses and hotbeds filled to overflowing with spring stock.

Washington, D. C.—Blankenship & Iglehart, builders with offices at 1107 E street, northwest, have been awarded the contract for three large greenhouses to be erected for Albert Heitmiller.

Utica, N. Y.—Roland T. Zoeckler has purchased the greenhouses of Chas. F. Seitzer and removed them to the rear of his home, 38 Hobart street, and will conduct a retail trade in cut flowers and potted plants.

Newington Junction, Conn.—Louis L. Barton, who purchased twenty-three acres of ground here and built one 300-foot greenhouse last summer, is planning to build another house soon and expects eventually to have one of the largest rose ranges north of Cromwell. He disposes of his stock at wholesale only and has a ready market for all that he can grow.

ARAUCARIAS. 6000 just received per Steamer Lapland from Antwerp, Belgium, more coming by next steamer. Araucaria Excelsa, Robusta Compacta and Excelsa Glauca, palms, etc. Florists, you know we are leaders for the last 25 years in importing, growing and shipping this so well known evergreen decorative plant, the Araucaria, more in favor now than ever. Almost every florist knows our Araucarias, therefore no argument is needed for our goods. We know what our customers want and need, and have provided for them and set aside special specimen plants of the Spring Importation 1911. These specimen plants will stand the climate everywhere and are especially adapted for decorating lawns, porches, verandas, bungalows, private summer residences, hotels and boarding-houses at the seashore or elsewhere. The prices in Araucarias have advanced considerably this season in Belgium; even the freight charges of the Red Star Line have advanced considerably, but we did not advance our prices and are giving every florist a show to fill those empty houses and grow them for their fall trade.

COLUMBUS, O.

The Market.

Trade has been good here of late, with plenty of stock of all kinds on the market. Roses have been quite plentiful, but quality has not been up to the standard with some of the stock. The demand has been about equal to the supply. Carnations have been in heavy crop and loads of them are disposed of. Although the price is down considerably on the bulk of the stock, the strictly first-class blooms bring a good, fair price. Sweet peas have been in good demand and at times there are barely enough to go the rounds.

Bulb stock is coming to the finish now; while there is quite a little on the market, another week will about wind it up. Valley has been rather scarce in this market since Easter and at times it is rather hard to obtain. There are quite a few lilies still on the market, but the demand has been rather light on them since Easter.

Smilax is scarce here at present, the numerous decorations of late having cleaned it all up.

Various Notes.

The Livingston Seed Co. reports heavy business in the seed department, the demand being ahead of last year, while cut flower trade is also quite heavy.

Graff Bros. report good business at the old stand. Mrs. Graff has been in the store most of the time since Will's death.

Sherman Stephens is making great preparations for the spring rush in plants.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. has a fine lot of salvias coming on and donated 5,000 of the plants to the Real Estate Board for beautifying vacant lots.

The Munk Floral Co. has opened a store downtown in the Harrison building and will carry on a retail business in connection with their jobbing trade in supplies.

E. Metzmaier reports good business and expects a big rush on plants in the near future.

Sam Graff reports heavy business in his new quarters in the Keith theater building. J. M.

Belleville, Ill.—The St. Clair Floral Co. has rented the store in connection with the Gem theater and will conduct a retail business at that place.

GARDENIAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Please state whether gardenias in 2½-inch pots can be forced into bloom for Christmas, 1912, and kept blooming until Easter. Any instructions as to how to prepare the soil and grow them will be greatly appreciated.

B. R. S.

Gardenias which are now in 2½-inch pots should be moved into 4-inch pots, and later into 6-inch pots. In the latter size they can be flowered for Christmas, provided you have the necessary heat to give them. In order to flower them well at that time, the plants must have a house kept at a minimum temperature of 65 to 68 degrees in winter. Pinch back the shoots in order to secure shapely plants, discontinuing this at the end of July. Gardenias like some bottom heat, and if you can stand your plants where they can get some, they will be less likely to get the yellows and will bloom earlier. For compost, three-fourths fibrous loam, from which the finer particles have been shaken out, one-fourth old dried cow manure and a good dash of coarse sand and fine charcoal will be found excellent. When they are well rooted, feed moderately with liquid manure; or, better still, use Clay's fertilizer as a surface dressing. Avoid excessive waterings, too much feeding or sharp changes of temperature, as any one of these will cause buds to drop.

Give your pots good drainage, use rather coarse compost, water carefully, syringe freely to keep mealy bug in check, use some bottom heat and a brisk top heat and you should get a nice lot of gardenia blooms for Christmas. These same plants, however, could hardly be expected to furnish many blooms for Easter. A batch grown 5 degrees to 8 degrees cooler in winter, however, would flower well at that date.

KOKOMO, IND.

As reported briefly in The Review of April 25, the Northern Indiana Florists' Association held its quarterly meeting here April 17. A large attendance was on hand and business of some importance was transacted.

One of the chief attractions was the exhibits, of which there were the following:

Frank & Sons, Portland, a vase each of Richmond, Killarney and White Killarney, each of which would have made a creditable showing at the national rose show.

In carnations, Frank & Son showed a vase of Lawson, Enchantress, May Day and Mrs. C. W. Ward. They also showed a bright red seedling, which they state is a profuse bloomer; also a white that seemed to be a good rival for White Wonder.

W. W. Coles had a large vase of Mrs. C. W. Ward, which was all that could be desired in a commercial way.

Henry W. Johnson, of Kendallville, displayed carnations and Godfrey callas, both fine.

W. W. Dederick, Warsaw, displayed some fine Enchantress and Rose-pink Enchantress.

J. H. Shelton, Rochester, had what he called California callas, of enormous size and different from any I have ever seen.

The Muncie Floral Co., of Muncie, displayed specimens of 4-inch geraniums.

Simon Humfeld, of Muncie, had a mixed lot of plants.

An elaborate banquet was spread at the Francis hotel, to which all did ample justice, and then the different greenhouses of the city were visited. Each place showed special features of interest and all were in a prosperous condition.

After a short afternoon session, the society adjourned to meet at Winona Lake July 17, at which time will occur the election of officers. A. J. W.

Calla, O.—Frank Rogers will build another greenhouse this spring.

Pansy Park Perfection is the best strain of plant show and fancy pansies, largest in size and of the greatest variety of rich and rare colors, the reds and bronzes in large proportion. The growing of pansy seeds and plants a specialty for nearly 40 years. Medium sized, hardy, field-grown plants from seed sown thinly broadcast, giving extra fine roots; many in bud. Good stock for sales later part of May and Memorial day; they will make better plants and bear larger flowers during the heat of summer when bedded out and will last in good condition much longer than plants grown under glass. Lightly packed and carry in good condition. Mixed colors, $3.50 1000; $2.00 500. Cash with order.
L. W. Goodell, Pansy Park, Dwight, Mass.

Greenhouse Heating.

SUBSCRIBERS are invited to write the editor of the Heating Department, describing their troubles or asking any questions regarding the heating of greenhouses, the piping or boiler-room. But please do not ask us to make a choice of apparatus for you. Each boiler advertised in The Review is a good boiler, and the advertisers sell them on their merits.

THE FUEL SITUATION.

Our good friends, the men in the coal business, to whom so large a part of the florists' receipts has been transferred this winter, always have told us that, contrary to general belief, theirs is a most unstable trade. Recent experience goes to prove the statement true. In the coal business, apparently, just as in the flower business, that which everyone expects to happen never comes to pass. Take last summer, for instance. All growers were urged to fill the bins in anticipation of a car shortage and a fuel famine in the autumn. But it did not come. In fact, the winter spot market was so weak that some dealers thought it best to reduce the prices on contracts made with florists. There was a little flurry due to snow blockades in January, but afterward the market was quiet until toward spring, when everyone began accumulating coal in anticipation of labor troubles. Prices for spot coal took a big jump. April 1 came, and the "strike," but the new wage scales have been agreed on for two years and the mines are open again this week—but the big accumulated stocks of coal hardly have been touched. Scarcely anybody is in the market. Spot coal is going begging, what little has come forward. The most experienced observers predict a flat market for weeks; at least through May. They say it is a fine opportunity for anyone able to take in coal now, and pay for it, cash.

With this situation, the question arises as to what the contract prices on coal are likely to be for the ensuing year. According to the Black Diamond, the programs have been mapped out by the different states about as follows: The Ohio mines, which have only the demands of the miners to meet, have arranged to add 5 cents a ton to last year's contract figures. The Indiana mines, which have the demands of the miners and some new laws to take care of, are adding 7 cents a ton to the old contract prices on mine run and screenings and 10 cents a ton on lump coal. The Illinois mines, having both the demands of the miners and the requirements of the new liability act to take care of, are practically forced to add a minimum of 12½ cents a ton to last year's prices to come out even. A short time ago, it seemed that smokeless mine run would be in big demand at fancy prices. In fact, the market seemed then, to some, to be so strong that a steady price of $1.25 for the year was declared to be warranted.

As to what will be the influence upon these contract prices of the immediate resumption of mining would be pure conjecture. It must be said, however, that with the mines running and with no demand for the coal, the results to the coal producer cannot be satisfactory. The great danger is that forcing the coal upon the spot market will cheapen the commodity and lead to hasty conclusions that the same condition will rule through the year. This is by no means certain; the market for coal frequently shifts direction as suddenly as does the cut flower market.

were three feet high and were put together in sections, which we fastened in place by wiring them to the iron pipes. We used two sets of the forms, removing the lower set each day, putting it on top and refilling it. Thus we went up three feet per day.

"The stack has a 36-inch flue. All scaffolding was placed inside, thus saving a good deal in that item of expense. The wall for the first thirty feet is eight inches thick, and the upper thirty-two feet is six inches thick. In the upper thirty-two feet we also reduced the size of the reinforcing pipes to 1-inch.

"The entire cost, including the making of the wooden forms and the excavating for the foundation, was $290. The connection to the boiler is made with a cement flue running from the boiler cellar up into the square base of the stack."

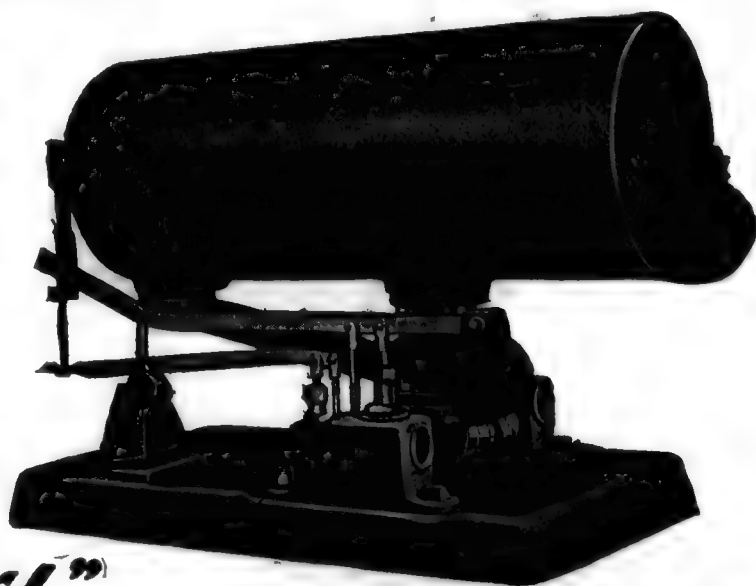

FROM STEAM TO HOT WATER.

Kindly let me know whether it would be practicable to change my heating system from steam to hot water. My three greenhouses are located on a square tract of ground, with the potting shed at one corner of this square and the boiler house at the opposite corner. Two of the houses meet at right angles, in the shape of an L, with the potting shed at the corner where they meet. These houses are 20 x 100 and 22 x 100. Inside the angle formed by these houses is the other house, 12 x 65, which runs parallel with the 20-foot house and abuts on the 22-foot house. The rest of the ground, between these houses and the boiler house, is vacant. Two main supply pipes extend from the boiler, at right angles to each other, one main running to the ends of the 20-foot and the 12-foot house, and the other to the end of the 22-foot house. The latter main is also tapped by a main which runs to the dwelling house, forty feet away.

The boiler is thirty horse-power and of the flue type, but has only a 2½-inch outlet. What size of holes would it be necessary to make for both flows and returns? What size of pipes should be used? At present the pipes are 2-inch and 1¼-inch. M. B. S.

For the main flow pipes, which run from the boiler to the nearest ends of the wide houses, 4-inch pipes should be used, and a 3-inch flow pipe should be run from near the boiler to the small house and another to the dwelling. Kroeschell versus Cast Iron

I have one of your new 1910 model Kroeschell Boilers, and same has proven very satisfactory. We have no trouble to keep temperatures in the coldest weather. We fire once or twice during the day and once at night and have had the best satisfaction I have ever experienced in a boiler. Formerly I had two cast iron boilers; one cracked, and I took both of these boilers out. My coal bill with the cast iron boilers ran from $195.00 to $207.00 per season during the past seven years. This year, with your boiler and soft coal, my coal bill was only $103.00, and I still have some coal left. Your boiler is the best and cheapest on the market, not alone for the price, but also in fuel saving. I am very glad that you are so well known in Buffalo, N. Y. I have never heard anything but praise, in which I join heartily.

Wishing you every success, I remain,

The wholesalers' forces have been spending almost as much time grading the stock, putting it in water, taking care of it, making room for more, etc., as in selling and packing. For all this effort the remuneration is sales at not overly large prices or to see the flowers leave via the barrel. The retailers have good reason to complain because of the dull business at a time when it should be good, and also because of the acts of certain of the public that killed considerable sales. Instead of the old "Kindly omit flowers" at the end of a death notice, a statement to which no one paid any attention, the bereaved families of a recent deceased, who would have received many floral tributes, stated in positive terms that they did not want flowers and would not accept them if they were sent. The growers have good and sufficient grounds to say unkind things about the weather man because they cannot get into their fields and work them. Just as the warm, bright days have come and dried up the ground to a workable state we have a few days of showers that again so saturate the earth that it is again unworkable. The bedding season for the plantmen is beginning slowly and not with the rush of last year.

The principal additions to the offerings of stock in quantity are some good outdoor valley and American Beauties of a much better quality than we have had for a long time. The supply of all other lines is adequate and the prices are reasonable. Some fine orchids are offered. The green goods market is amply supplied. The call for wild smilax is good and it is going from town in all directions.

Tales of Ancient Pottery.

One of the most noted pieces of ancient pottery is the Portland Vase or sepulchral urn. It was discovered in the 17th century in a tomb three miles from Rome. The colors are a deep dark blue, almost black ground, on which the designs were cut from a layer of opaque white glaze in cameo style. The subject represented never has been satisfactorily determined. The vase is thus described at a sale in 1786: "The most celebrated antique vase or sepulchral urn; from the Barberini cabinet at Rome. It is the identical urn which contained the ashes of the Roman Emperor Alexander Severus and his mother Mammaea, which was deposited in the earth 235 years after Christ and was dug up by order of Pope Urban VIII between 1623 and 1644 A. D.

"The materials of its composition emulate onyx, the grounds a rich dark amethystine color, and the snowy figures which adorn it are in bas-relief of workmanship above all encomium, and such as cannot but excite in us the highest idea of the arts of the ancients. Its dimensions are 9 3/4 inches high and 2 1/4 inches in circumference. It is valued at more than a thousand pounds. Beautiful and perfectly satisfactory copies of this vase were made by Josiah Wedgwood in 1781, one of which sold in 1872 for 180 pounds.

"The original has had a remarkable history; while on deposit in the British Museum in the year 1845 a young student, who was one of the visitors, while in a delirious condition hurled a stone which broke the vase into fragments. It was placed in the hands of a restorer and the fragments united with such skill that the damage was almost imperceptible. This gem of ancient art may be seen in the gold room of the British Museum."

TOMATOES AND CUCUMBERS.

Could cucumbers and tomatoes be grown satisfactorily in a house where bedding plants are grown, if the seed of tomatoes were sown February 1, and cucumbers March 1? They would be grown on benches, so that they would only partly occupy the house until June 1, when the bedding stock would be out. What would be the best method of management?

What would be the best way to pipe a house 18x100 feet, running east and west, with 5-foot cement walls with the exception of the south side, which would have two feet of glass above three feet of cement? C. A. P.

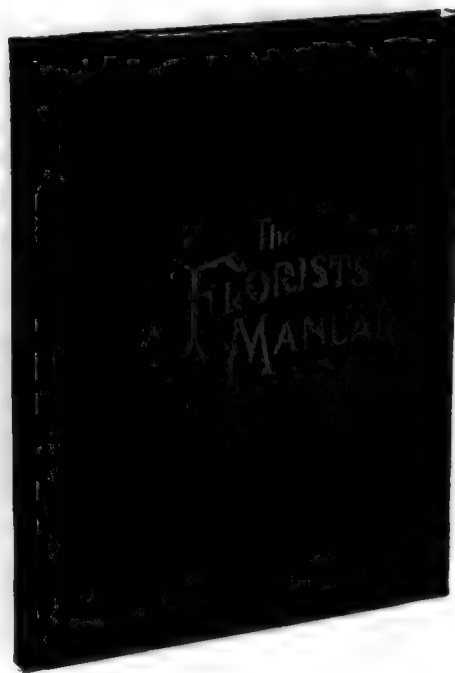

Tomatoes would work out all right, using part of the bench, but cucumbers would not, as they grow so rapidly that they would shade all other stock and they require a warmer temperature. These two conditions would ruin anything in the line of bedding plants. You might make it by starting the cukes a month later. It is not best to try to grow both cukes and tomatoes in the same house. They like different degrees of moisture and temperature.

For these crops keep the pipes under the benches and about a foot below the bottoms of the benches. You do not say what kind of heat is wanted, or whether the house is separate or against another. For steam you would need ten lines of 1½-inch pipe for your purposes if the house is alone, but if protected, less might do.

within the last few months is remarkable and is explained by the fact that the growers have been assured of their market.

The early vegetable business will make even greater strides in the next few years. From the limited market of a few years ago there is being developed a great consuming population, which will take all the produce of this kind that is offered. There is an ever increasing demand for early vegetables, for fresh vegetables through as many months of the year as possible. To meet that demand is a task for the farmers in those counties whose mild

A LETTER FROM MOBERLY, MO.

I had the misfortune to fall on the icy pavement early in January, receiving such injuries as to necessitate my retiring from active business, which is now being conducted by my husband, H. V. Estill, and son, F. H. Estill, ably assisted by my daughter, Louise, and Miss Julia Guffey. The style of the firm is Estill Floral Co. Business was never better. While Easter was good, the continued increase in plant trade has made this month even better than last. The greenhouses, seven in number, are full to overflowing with thrifty stock, and 5,000 young carnations are clamoring for the field.

Our neighboring florists, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Meyer, report a highly satisfactory season, and they are up to their eyes in spring work.

Although I am incapacitated for service in the store, I am by no means "laid on the shelf." I spend several hours daily in the greenhouse and am "advisory board" to both growing force and selling force.

Enclosed you will find $2 for the renewal of my subscription to The Review for two years. The paper means more, if possible, to me now than ever, for since my accident I have had time to read every word of it, and consider it not only a business counselor, but a personal friend. Mrs. R. S. Estill.

TOLEDO, O.

Fire destroyed the home of Emil Kuhnke, on Holland avenue, about 7 o'clock Tuesday morning, April 23. The loss to building and contents is estimated at $800. The fire originated in the attic, probably from a defective chimney. A wood fire in the kitchen stove is thought to have communicated a spark into the attic. The fire was discovered by the fireman at the greenhouses and the family was notified. Some of the household goods were saved, but the fire had made such progress before the fire department could arrive that the house was a total loss.

PITTSBURGH.

The Market.

April has closed somewhat better than one would have thought; stock shortened up last week and prices became somewhat firmer, and the month, taken as a whole, has been quite satisfactory. The wholesale houses had a new experience the last few days of the week, cleaning up everything that was good at fair prices, but the retailers seem to be doing a quiet business; no rush any place and some little complaint in others about quiet trade. The cut flower growers do not like so much rain, as it prevents the planting of carnations in the field. Plantsmen are beginning to push out some of their stock, as all are now crowded for room. All believe the indications are for a good spring trade.

All the California privet hedges in this vicinity are winter-killed. Many are cutting to the ground, hoping they will come again, but most of the plants are entirely dead. The same is true of many of the so-called hardy herbaceous plants, and people who had fine borders and beds last season are finding plenty of holes to replant.

Various Notes.

The John Bader Co. will put up several new plant houses this year, and has added an auto delivery truck. This firm is now busy with spring stock and all the houses emptied for Easter are more than crowded again.

Randolph & McClements will be in their new store by the time this goes to press, and are busy getting their old Baum street houses removed.

The A. W. Smith Co. is making quite a feature of landscape work. R. F. Primes has charge of that department and has a number of nice contracts on hand. The seed department, which was established two years ago, has proven a large success.

The Pittsburgh Florists' Exchange has its new store on Oliver avenue about ready. The ice-boxes were built in last week. This gives them a good, roomy store in a central location.

The McCallum Co. has the changes about completed and is just beginning to feel at home in the new store.

J. B. Murdoch & Co. report business good. They are receiving some good roses and carnations.

The Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. is making quite a run with yellow daisies, which are much in favor as corsage flowers. This company is also cutting some fine cattleyas.

Hoo-Hoo.

91-93 CHAMBERS ST. NEW YORK

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet.
An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

STATE COLLEGE, PA.

The second annual flower show was held April 20, in the spacious head house of the new greenhouses at the Pennsylvania State College, under the auspices of the Department of Horticulture and the Penn State Crab Apple Club. It is estimated that nearly 2,000 people visited the exhibition.

The exhibition was artistically staged under the direction of Prof. J. W. Gregg, who is in charge of floriculture and landscape gardening and who so successfully inaugurated the custom a year ago. With the success of this second exhibition it is safe to say that it must now be considered one of the great social and educational events of the college year. While the exhibit from the college greenhouses, consisting of ten varieties of carnations, Easter lilies, orchids, snapdragons, geraniums, palms, ferns, and floral pieces representing student work, was artistically arranged, the real success of the show was due to the coöperation of some of the largest and best commercial growers in the state.

The Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. sent a display of roses and carnations, perhaps the largest and, as a whole, the finest exhibit in the show. J. L. Dillon, Bloomsburg, staged some excellent Richmond, Killarney, White Killarney and My Maryland, while the stems and blooms of the Enchantress, White Enchantress and Rose-pink Enchantress, Bassett and Winsor were excellent. S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia, staged their usual high quality of roses and carnations. Myers & Samtman, Wyndmoor, were again on hand with American Beauties and Hilda. The Florex Gardens, North Wales, were heavy exhibitors of roses, including American Beauty, all of them of a quality that won for them a prominent place in the show. Senator Heacock, Wyncote, sent some of his famous roses. Evenden Bros., Williamsport, staged a fine exhibit of Gov. Herrick violets, sweet peas, swainsona, alyssum, roses and carnations, which included an unnamed white seedling that attracted much attention. Oakwood Rose Gardens, Oil City, sent some excellent Bride, Maid and Richmond, while their White Killarney and Killarney demanded more than one look. Fred C. Greene, Oil City, showed a fine plant of Spiraea Gladstone and the New Jersey Experiment Station, at New Brunswick, sent some fine Maryland roses from plants grown in the same soil for three years, entirely with chemical fertilizers. Rudolph Kaiser, Annapolis, Md., staged some excellent snapdragons, Bradt carnations and smilax.

Wagner Plant Boxes are the best and cheapest in the market for Palms, Boxwood, Bay Trees, etc. They are attractive in design, strong and durable, suitable for either indoor or outdoor use. Sarcozie, Mo.—Gilbert H. Wild, who grows fifteen acres of peonies for cut flower purposes, says that the crop in this section will not be large this season; he estimates it as two-thirds what was cut last year. The dry weather last summer is the reason he assigns for the light crop.

SPRAYS FOR CRITICISM

HERE'S ANOTHER MARTYR.

Sends Designs for Criticism.

The Review has received some photographs, one of which is reproduced herewith, accompanied by the following letter:

I am sending you pictures of some of the work I have put up. I shall be glad to have you reproduce them in The Review and criticise them, as you have done with others—I want to know what the trade thinks of my work and trust that you will do justice to this opportunity. In reproducing I ask that you leave the name in.

Hilary E. Le Page.

Criticism Necessarily Frank.

I have been requested to make these criticisms and, as criticism is necessarily frank and perhaps brutal at times, I hope that the maker of the designs, who is positively unknown to me, will at least accept my meaning in a broad sense, considering the interest of those of our trade at large who may read what has been written and perhaps find some benefit. Our desire is only to improve our work by a clearer understanding of art and, therefore, the criticisms are, in the belief of the writer, true, without exaggeration or restraint.

It would be hardly fair to the designer of the work in the pictures submitted, or to the critic, to proceed with criticism without a few words of explanation on some of the simple and essential lines of art.

Designing is a space, and art is concerned in breaking up that space to create a pleasing eye picture of harmony in material tone and color.

Your interest must be attracted to some object or high light, and all else must be subservient to that principle. Your arrangement must contain a decided theory or tell a positive story and, while the general lines must conform and be proportionate to the whole, the high light or attraction must center on some locality and be distinct in detail and assertion.

The main form will first hold the great interest, and so you must center your opposition or high light interest on the main body.

Where two directions or objects are contrary, the greatest interest will be found at the greatest point of opposition, so at the greatest point of opposition you must place your greatest interest or high light and there must repose your richest material. You must be always careful that you do not create a point of interest and fail to qualify it.

Remember, we are to a great extent copiers of nature. When we use material in masses for form, our high light or interest point must be in decided opposition, yet all must harmonize in proportion and color.

Where you have two strongly contrasting factors a third, well chosen, will harmonize them.

Nature groups her subjects and in the grouping of subjects you create your opposing point of interest.

So much for Art.

We must always consider material. Our aim is to produce, at a minimum of cost in material, a maximum of beauty in design. So we must be careful at all times not to enrich at the expense down and find a bow of ribbon and a number of ends. We have failed to find a high light of sufficient interest, for we find an almost equal attractive value in each of the materials mentioned. True, there has been care in grouping, but it has been painful in its precision and without conventional form to excuse it. Conventional lines are to be avoided in such a piece as this; they only have place in some of the so-called set pieces.

Sprays Offered for Criticism.

of material, but rather by care in selection and art in design. "Waste not; want not."

The illustration contains two clusters. The larger cluster tells the story of a pair of cycas leaves, with a cluster of carnations tied into place by a bow of ribbon. The cycas take separate angles and lead the eye to the cluster, but as direction is the same, we continue on

Had the maker lengthened a few of his carnations and given a little of nature's freedom in his arranging, he would have broken the symmetrical uselessness of flower mass and would have gained some opposition to his general outline, and by showing the projection of stems or the reversal of flowers at the tying point he would have given sufficient excuse for his ribbon bow, but not for the innumerable ends.

The smaller cluster of violets calls for practically no criticism. The flowers are massed into what is commonly called an oval form. This in the small size is sufficient to attract, but should be without a tie unless the flowers are given proper direction and the stems are apparent, or the bunch reverses its direction to give cause for the tie. The tie should be of ribbon and not of cord, in my estimation.

Fred C. W. Brown.

Criticism Is Cold.

It seems a cold-blooded thing to criticize a design from a photograph, as no doubt the dewy freshness of the flowers would appeal to you and put a quite

Form Lacks Grace.

In making up violets into the form of a small spray there is little chance for the designer to show his skill. About all one can do is to wire the violets into small bunches of five or six flowers and then make these small bunches into a spray. In the spray illustrated herewith, were it not for the cord, a person could not tell which was the end of the spray, as apparently no stem shows. Violets being usually short-stemmed, some other green must be used to produce the effect desired. Small green galax leaves resemble the violet leaf and stem most closely, but these are not always available. On a small spray of violets a number of loops of violet cord are pretty, but on piece also are bunched up too closely in the end of the spray. It would have been far more pleasing to the eye if in making the spray the first flowers tied had been left to extend out more, even if from four inches to six inches of the stem were to show.

The next time the designer of the piece shown is called on to make up a similar one, let him wire some of his carnations and let them project out gracefully from between the others, so that, instead of having an even line around the outside of the spray, the flowers will have a more careless but still graceful and airy appearance. On a piece of this description a bow of ribbon is decidedly proper, as it holds the flowers to the cypress leaves, or should at least produce this effect. The bow shown in the picture is nicely tied.

Hugo Schroeter.

Tailor-Made Sprays.

This tailor-made casket spray is a familiar sight in the average flower shop, and in many a one boasting of high class equipment and patronage. It is so neat, so trim, so well groomed, so eminently proper as to suppress every naughty bit of truancy and sweet willfulness of every carnation and fern leaf upon two as proper cypress leaves as ever revolved.

Why is it that so many in the store craft seem to think that artistic work is so intangible, so impractical, that only in some far-off dream day in the next world, when there is no rush on, they will throw off the shackles of conventionality, unbridle their artistic instincts and decorate the heaven of heavens? Do it here, friends. Break loose today.

To our friend who has so generously offered his work for criticism, we would suggest, first, that he has cut the carnation stems too short. If the foliage is good you will need to do little if any clipping. The stems are needed to balance the bulk and length of the flower part of the spray. The top-heaviness of this spray is increased by the addition of the cypress leaves. A scattered bunch of carnations at the base of the cypress leaves would be better. Or the cypress leaves might be ribbed with long, stemmed carnations wired, from the base to the tips. The cypress leaves could be crossed and tied low. In this way a few flowers would be thrown below the tie and their stems and the cypress stems would appear.

different aspect to the rather stiff arrangement of the bunch of carnations shown. To eliminate the stiff cypress leaves and make the carnations a little more irregular on the sides would greatly improve the design as to form. With more pretty ferns as a background and a bunch of maidenhair fern just above the bow, it would do nicely.

Carnations are not easy to arrange in a flat bunch and a really graceful bunch is almost an impossibility, as the stems are so bare and the heads almost too heavy for the stems. This makes them much harder to deal with than the always graceful rose, which seems to respond to the least effort and looks well in any position.

I do not like the cypress leaves for any floral arrangement. The palm family is merely decorative as a pot plant in rooms, halls, churches or landscapes and does not enhance the beauty of flowers. Hence it seems wrong to cut and use them for that purpose when there are so many exquisite ferns that seem to be made expressly to mingle their grace and freshness with the fragrance and purity of the blooms, whether it is the queen of flowers, the rose, the popular carnation, the dainty sweet pea, or the most of other equally lovely specimens of the flower family. I love them all and it is a delight to gather, to arrange, to weave them in bunches, garlands, etc., to go forth on their errands of love and sympathy.

as large a spray as the one shown a violet ribbon in about a No. 9 width, or a 2-inch gauze, would be more effective.

The larger picture is that of two cypress leaves crossed and a spray of carnations tied thereon. In making up a spray of flowers to be fastened to cypress leaves, a far more artistic effect will be produced by not using fern leaves under the flowers. The cypress leaves in themselves are enough to support the flowers. The carnations in this tains the best touch in the whole arrangement. If as much swing were allowed the flowers as is shown in the ribbon arrangement and some of the ferns were grouped against the tie, the spray would have been above censure. Scatter, loosen and free the flowers. Lengthen the stem end of the spray.

While the same may be said of the violet spray, the fault is not so exaggerated. It could be loosened and more depth added by wiring the flowers and foliage onto a brush of Asparagus Sprengeri. Each spray of Sprengeri could be covered separately and all tied together, making a springy, airy spray of violets and foliage.

FOR A SENATOR'S FUNERAL.

The funeral pieces illustrated on page 14 were made for the funeral of Senator Robert L. Taylor, which took place at Knoxville, Tenn. The funeral was one of the largest ever held in the south; there were over 8,000 people at the cemetery. The picture shows the scene in the room where the body lay in state, with the various specimens of the florists' handiwork arranged on the stage behind the casket. As the senator died on Sunday and the funeral was not held until the following Friday, some of the designs were not in such a condition as to show to advantage in the picture. The funeral party traveled from Washington in a special train, which was detained in Virginia for thirty-six hours on account of the high water, thus delaying the funeral. One of the largest pieces—the tall design in the center of the back row—was made by Charles L. Baum, of Knoxville.

The trade really is indebted to Chapin Bros., Lincoln, Neb., for the discovery of Mothers' day. It was the second Sunday in May, 1908, that the Chapins wrote to The Review telling how Mothers' day had appeared unannounced in Lincoln and caught them unprepared. They wanted to know more about it: what Mothers' day was, and what should be done to prepare for it. The Review said nothing then—after it was all over for that year—but two weeks before Mothers' day in 1909 The Review printed the Chapin letter, bringing Mothers' day conspicuously to the attention of the whole trade and suggesting many ways it could be pushed. Everybody knows the rest—the business of the day has grown "by leaps and bounds." Each year when Mothers' day approached, The Review has shown how enterprising florists worked up Mothers' day the season before. The letters from the trade have been of the greatest assistance in this.

Write to The Review right after Mothers' day—it is next Sunday—telling what you did to work up business. Especially tell how you turned a part of the demand to "bright flowers for mothers living." That is the point of prime importance now.

A WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

The photograph here reproduced gives some idea of the style of church decorating done by the A. F. Kellner Co., of Milwaukee, Wis. The firm makes this line of business a specialty. The decoration shown in the picture was executed last March for the golden wedding anniversary of one of the firm's former employees.

Wild smilax was used for the overhead work, while palms formed the background for neat groups made up of Manda's golden privet, cibotiums and a collection of other ferns. Four laurel trees were used to good advantage. The number 50, which was made up of double narcissi, showed up well. A vase of roses at each side of the center gave the hedgelike effect a pretty finishing touch. E. O.

WIENHOEBER'S AUTO.

The Ernst Wienhoeber Co., Chicago, was almost the last of the prominent retailers of that city to adopt the motor as a means of delivery—the horses looked good enough for a long time, but finally the commercial automobile became so highly developed that most of the early objections were overcome. The car shown in the accompanying illustration has been in use one season, and it is safe to say that the Wienhoeber Co. now would find it indispensable.

The smaller cluster of violets calls for practically no criticism. The flowers are massed into what is commonly called an oval form. This in the small size is sufficient to attract, but should be without a tie unless the flowers are given proper direction and the stems are apparent, or the bunch reverses its direction to give cause for the tie. The tie should be of ribbon and not of cord, in my estimation.

Fred C. W. Brown.

Criticism Is Cold.

It seems a cold-blooded thing to criticize a design from a photograph, as no doubt the dewy freshness of the flowers would appeal to you and put a quite

Form Lacks Grace.

In making up violets into the form of a small spray there is little chance for the designer to show his skill. About all one can do is to wire the violets into small bunches of five or six flowers and then make these small bunches into a spray. In the spray illustrated herewith, were it not for the cord, a person could not tell which was the end of the spray, as apparently no stem shows. Violets being usually short-stemmed, some other green must be used to produce the effect desired. Small green galax leaves resemble the violet leaf and stem most closely, but these are not always available. On a small spray of violets a number of loops of violet cord are pretty, but on piece also are bunched up too closely in the end of the spray. It would have been far more pleasing to the eye if in making the spray the first flowers tied had been left to extend out more, even if from four inches to six inches of the stem were to show.

The next time the designer of the piece shown is called on to make up a similar one, let him wire some of his carnations and let them project out gracefully from between the others, so that, instead of having an even line around the outside of the spray, the flowers will have a more careless but still graceful and airy appearance. On a piece of this description a bow of ribbon is decidedly proper, as it holds the flowers to the cyeas leaves, or should at least produce this effect. The bow shown in the picture is nicely tied.

CONCRETE CONSTRUCTION

ITS USE IN GREENHOUSES.

Durability Combined with Cheapness.

The object of this talk is to indicate by illustration and description one of the newer but rapidly expanding applications of concrete, namely, in greenhouse construction. It is only within comparatively recent years that serious attention has been paid by florists to the advantages offered by concrete in this class of building.

With the rapid decrease of our timber supply, and the resulting increase in the price of lumber, there has come a necessary demand for a new building material. The progressive florist has hailed with delight the advent and rapid rise of the use of the new building material—concrete—a manufactured stone as durable as rock, stronger than brick or rubble stone masonry, adaptable to practically any form of detail, but more important than all these to the florist is its ultimate cheapness for construction purposes.

Portland cement is a term applied to the finely ground product resulting from the burning together of various materials of proper chemical composition. It is not called Portland cement because it was first made in Portland, Me., or in Portland, Ore., but because the Englishman who first made it thought he detected a resemblance between the material and a certain natural stone known as Portland.

The first cement mill in this country was built by David O. Saylor, at Coplay, Pa., in 1871. There were, January 1, 1912, about 100 cement manufacturing companies throughout the United States, whose total output for the year 1911 was approximately 78,000,000 barrels. This gives you some idea as to the great progress made in a few years.

What Concrete Is.

Concrete is the hardened, rock-like product resulting from a mixture of Portland cement, sand and gravel or broken stone with water. Cement is the material which binds the sand, gravel or broken stone together, the whole being referred to as concrete. There are many brands of cement on the market. Each manufacturer gives his product a special brand name and uses a trademark, which is printed on the sacks in which the product is packed. The terms cement and concrete, while frequently used interchangeably, are in no sense synonymous.

Up to a few years ago lumber was used exclusively in bench construction, but with the constant increase in price, some florists began to experiment with concrete for greenhouse construction. At first the application was to posts only and, as no drawbacks to the concrete posts with a spread footing were found, it became standard practice.

An abstract of an illustrated talk by S. A. Jamieson, of the Universal Portland Cement Co., before the Chicago Florists' Club, May 2, 1912.

Next came the monolithic bench, of which there are such excellent examples in use today.

Poehlmann Bros. Co., Morton Grove, Ill., first used a monolithic or one-stone bench 250 feet long and five feet wide. These benches have given excellent satisfaction, but the illustrations herewith are of a concrete bench of a later design used by them. It is of sectional construction and, for the purpose of being photographed, the piece shown in the larger picture was set up by three men in ten minutes. In the background are piles of concrete lumber from which the benches are made. This lumber is cast in a central plant and as no piece is heavier than one man can lift, it is easily handled and hauled to place, and can be erected by common labor.

Dimensions of Members.

The bench consists of 6-inch tapered posts having 10-inch bases; cross beams forty-nine inches long, six inches deep and one and one-half inches thick, resting in slots in the posts; 2x4 stringers six feet two and one-half inches long, resting on the cross beams; side pieces of "L" shape, six feet long by ten inches high by one and one-quarter inches thick, with an angle cast at the bottom three and one-half inches wide, forming the rest for the bottom slabs; end pieces of the same section as the sides, and bench slabs fifty-three inches long, nine and one-half inches wide and one and one-eighth inches thick, resting on the sides and also on the stringer at the center.

The bottom slabs lock the whole structure together, so that it has all the stability of a monolith and yet cannot be cracked or injured by a settlement or movement of any part. Each member is carefully reinforced with both chicken wire and several ¼-inch twisted square bars, except the stringers, which have ½-inch bars only.

This bench may be erected with any number of sections, is readily moved when changes become necessary, has perfect drainage, cannot tip over, cannot rot or rust, never requires repairs, is economical and is a permanent asset to any florist.

The plant required for making the concrete lumber consists of a batch mixer, sill molds and a number of special molds for the sides and ends, which were made up by carpenters.

The first cost of construction was two and one-third times what it would have been for lumber. But fifteen years from now the concrete benches will be as good as they are today, while in the same period three sets of wood benches would have been built at a greater cost than for concrete. The actual economy of concrete is thus demonstrated conclusively.

Sectional Concrete Bench Built by Poehlmann Bros. Co., Merton Grove, Ill.

Other Uses of Concrete.

Other uses of concrete in the Poehlmann plant are numerous. All drains and sewers are of cement drain tile. The 10x36-inch size are made at an average rate of fifteen per day by one man and a machine. Sidewalks and tracks are extensive, the concrete being carried up flush with the rails for the latter. The manure pits are of concrete and those in use for years show no deterioration, though constantly subjected to live steam and organic acids.

Concrete has proved extremely satisfactory and economical in this work and has required no special engineering supervision, the owners having not only developed the system but also personally supervised the construction.

The Wittbold Bench.

The concrete bench in the greenhouses of the Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago, were built by the use of patented forms and clamps invented and perfected by Louis Wittbold. This style of bench is the result of many years of experimenting. A typical bench at this establishment is five feet wide and 100 feet long. The bottom and side walls are only one inch in thickness. It is supported by two rows of concrete posts, forty-four inches on centers, each way. The posts, which are five inches in diameter, are built by the use of patented molds and poured at the same time as the bench proper. No reinforcement is used in the posts, while the bench is reinforced by a single thickness of standard 2-inch mesh poultry netting. A strip of this a foot wider than the finished bench is laid in the forms before pouring. The edges are bent up so as to reinforce the side walls and it is supported at the proper height from the bottom form by small tapering blocks placed at intervals, according to soil conditions. These blocks are left in place when the concrete is poured and are withdrawn when the forms are removed, thus providing openings for proper drainage.

The mixture used for this work consists of one part of cement to three parts of washed torpedo sand. No coarse aggregate was used. The materials were mixed with sufficient water to form a slush concrete and the entire bench, including posts, bottom and side walls, was poured at one operation. The forms were left on the work for two days.

The speaker here showed a series of views of various styles of concrete benches, including among others one used by Walter S. Hall, Osage, Ia., in which the blocks are one foot wide and as long as necessary for the width of the bench; one in the Schiller establishment, Chicago, where the Wittbold style is used, and an interior view of Robert Wilson's retail establishment at Brooklyn, N. Y., which afforded a good idea of the well known Wilson bench, used so much in the east. Then followed three views taken in the Garfield Park conservatories, Chicago, where concrete has contributed its share toward the perfection of one of the most superb conservatories in this country.

You will notice, said the lecturer, that no system of bench construction has come into general use. In most instances the individual grower has endeavored independently to solve his own problems, but a "Universal" desire for permanent construction in greenhouses tends toward the use of concrete.

Concrete in Tree Dentistry.

Concrete plays a part in the conservation of shade and fruit trees. Tree dentistry is somewhat of a new art, but it is gradually coming into general use. After the decay is removed from the interior of the rotting trunk, there remains a shell of living sapwood and bark. The cement mortar is packed tightly into the cavity and then built out into the original outline of the tree. The bark will eventually cover the filled-in wound at the rate of one inch per year. The tree thus in time regains its normal appearance.

There are so many more uses to which concrete is placed in greenhouses that I cannot mention them all, but here are a few illustrations which have presented themselves most readily to my hand. Kroeschell Bros. Co. for many years has been using concrete for the base of boilers, both for exhibition purposes and for permanent use. The picture now on the screen shows an exhibit at the convention of the Society of American Florists, Baltimore, in 1911. The boiler weighs 12,000 pounds. It is set on a concrete ashpit base. To the right in the background we have the iron frame greenhouse with which we are all familiar, exhibited by our honored president, Mr. Foley.

A concrete block boiler house and packing shed has been erected by William Hill, at his vegetable range at Irondequoit, N. Y. The stack is built of concrete blocks and is sixty-five feet high. The inside diameter at the outlet

Washburn asked the speaker what mixture he recommended for benches and walls. One part cement to three parts torpedo sand was advocated for benches and one part cement to two parts sand and four parts gravel or crushed stone was said to be rich enough for retaining walls. A one, two, three mixture was said to be watertight. A hollow wall was described as offering more resistance to frost than does a solid wall. The speaker said ashes do not give the strength of sand, the ashes having a tendency to disintegrate. To prevent forms from adhering to the completed work, first brush the forms with gasoline in which common axle grease has been dissolved, a pound to a gallon; then pour the concrete and the forms will not stick.

donor has contributed a sum of money to charity in memory of the deceased, impels me to ask: How much longer do the florists propose to permit their business to proceed without the necessary protection to counteract conditions which may arise from time to time detrimental to the interests of the florist?

Take, for instance, such a movement as the one just referred to; if it ever should be permitted to gain a momentum through having the idea adopted by charitable organizations generally, no one can foresee how far-reaching its effect might be on one of the most important branches of the florists' business. Nor is it unreasonable to believe that such a custom could in time be developed and gain adherents to it if a combined effort was made on the part of some of the strongly organized charities to accomplish it; especially if no opposition was met from those vitally interested in retarding it.

On the other hand, at about the same time the unfavorable notice just alluded to appeared, the press agents of "The Greatest Show on Earth" were contributing an article to the New York dailies, setting forth that a congress of famous circus performers, gathered to lament on their exclusion from the joys of Easter, had selected the orchid as a symbol of their order, and declared that "the bank roll eating orchid, the costliest of flowers," was in evidence everywhere in the three rings on the Easter eve performances.

What an opportunity was lost to the florists to build on a good press story simply for the want of a proper publicity organization, which today is regarded as one of the most essential factors in the organization of every well directed industry, and certainly floriculture is entitled to be classed as an industry; in many respects really a scientific one, when it comes to production, but yet lacking in its distributing force for what it produces.

There is much discussion in the trade papers on the great problems confronting growers to find a ready market for their continually increasing supply and the consensus of opinion appears to be that it is all up to the retailer to develop the necessary demand. But is twenty-one inches and at the bottom thirty-two inches. It was made larger at the base so as to permit a firebrick lining a few feet above the smoke inlet. The blocks are made in various sizes, six being required for the circle. Forty such stacks are now used by Rochester vegetable growers, a company having been formed by two young men who build these stacks complete with labor and material at $2 per foot.

Illustrations and Discussion.

Among the fifty other pictures shown by the stereopticon were the following: Concrete stack of B. Eldredge, Belvidere, Ill., thirty inches in diameter and sixty feet high; show house of G. Basler, Buffalo; private conservatories of A. C. Bartlett, Lake Geneva, Wis., built on a hillside with concrete retaining wall; mushroom cellar under concrete floor of the greenhouses of E. Jacobi, Newark, N. J.; several views of the Riverbank Greenhouses, Batavia, Ill., where concrete was largely used, even for the sorting table in the packing shed; storage house of the Jewell Nursery Co., Lake City, Minn., built of concrete blocks; concrete lighting posts, flower vases and manure pit at Humboldt Park, Chicago; concrete ice house of J. Ogden Armour, Lake Forest, Ill., and a rose house of Robert Simpson, Clifton, N. J., where the stock is grown in solid beds between low concrete side walls, the heating pipes being supported by the edging.

THE EVERY-DAY WORK.

Throwing Out Old Stock.

Most growers begin to throw out a portion of their old plants as soon as possible after the Easter cut is off. This spreads the work of replanting over a longer season, saves employing so much extra help and, incidentally, allows the planting of considerable new stock before the summer heat is at its greatest. Looking at the benches at this date, one is often tempted to carry over to another season stock that ought to be thrown out. The reason is that almost any kind of a plant is making good growth now, but if this worn-out stock is allowed to go on and flower all summer, or even part of the summer, it will be worthless during late fall and winter, when flowers are again in demand.

From One Extreme to Another.

But some people who have suffered from leaving old stock in too long are prone to jump to the opposite extreme and say that rose plants should be renewed annually. Extremes are seldom profitable, and the man who steers clear of them and uses common sense instead of sticking to hard and fast rules will be ahead of the game.

Take the case of American Beauty. A frequent cause of failure is leaving the plants too long in the same soil. It may not be necessary to throw them away, but I am positive that no Beauty is good the second year unless it has a good rest sometime during the season. This rose is, strictly speaking, an old French-raised hybrid perpetual, of the same character as General Jacqueminot, and all such varieties need a rest. Without it they keep on pushing shoots, but not the class of shoots that produce the fine flowers characteristic of this rose at its best.

Forcing Plants to Rest.

An excellent method with plants not needed for flowering now is to dry them off entirely and cut them back to within about a foot of the soil. Then, when the new soil has been placed in the benches, replant and treat the same as for established Beauties. It is useless to wait for the plants to go to rest naturally. Force them to rest by withholding water and lowering the temperature. On solid, ground beds it will probably be necessary to remove a good deal of the soil to get the plants to rest. When replanting, cut back the strongest roots considerably, and any that are bruised or damaged in any way.

Good Wood for Propagation.

It is not too late for propagating, and if late plants are likely to be useful a good deal of the wood on any plants of any variety may be used before throwing them away. Such wood, in fact, is better than the small, blind shoots that are all that can be spared for the purpose during the earlier months of the year, when every bit of flowering wood must be made the most of. Plants propagated late are quite satisfactory for following old stock kept for summer flowering and thrown out in August—better, in fact, than earlier propagated stock that has been neglected owing to rush of other work and left in small pots all summer.

Young stock growing in the houses needs constant attention now. Sometimes it is well looked after until potted into 3-inch; then it is stood pot-thick and allowed to draw up and become spindly, in which case it is no better than later struck plants. At least once in two weeks it should be gone over, cutting all weak shoots clean out, removing half open flowers and giving the plants a new stand. Even the removal of the plants from one bench to another does a great deal of good, preventing stagnation of air about them and improving their appearance.

The Summer Flowering Stock.

The summer flowering plants must not be neglected. Kaiserin is pushing up the fine, straight shoots characteristic of the variety, and the roots must be well fed and plenty of water allowed. Keep the plants open and cut out all useless spray. There is little danger now of checking the plants or losing foliage, provided the night temperature is kept regular and plenty of air is allowed on all possible occasions. Consolidate the growth, as it is produced, by this plentiful air supply and by keeping the glass free from all obstructions to the light. The same holds good for summer Killarney, White Killarney, Richmond, Radiance and others, none of which will stand for neglect if good flowers are to be produced.

GETTING READY FOR JUNE.

It takes about three weeks to flower lily of the valley, provided the proper bottom heat and top temperature can be given it. Cold storage pips from now on will be used exclusively and these give excellent results if the pips are not kept in too low a temperature. At 26 to 28 degrees they will not take any harm, but at 18 or 20 degrees a large proportion of the pips will be destroyed. Always soak in water for a few hours to plump them up well before starting. This makes quite a difference in the way they start. Keep close and dark until the stalks are half grown. Then gradually increase the light. Use no water overhead after the flowers are expanding, for fear of spotting them. At this season there is less danger from this cause than in winter. If you want good foliage, and after all valley without leaves is worth little at this season, you must give the plants good light after the first ten days. If you want valley with fine, dark foliage, equal to the outdoor article, grow the pips in full light all the time. The stems will come shorter, but the splendid leaves will fully counterbalance this.

Valley of fine quality can be produced in frames after the early part of May. All that is necessary is a well built, close frame. For a week or two longer, a little bottom heat will be an advantage; after that it is not necessary. Put six inches of sand over your manure and plant the pips in here as you would in your frame in the greenhouse. The frame can be partitioned so that you can have two or more batches coming on and give it the proper treatment. In the increasing solar heat it will be comparatively easy to maintain a brisk heat in the frame. Don't overdo the heat, however, or you will get leggy stalks.

In June, the season of weddings, the demand for valley is quite heavy, and, in order to be prepared for this, a frame should be prepared at once.

COLD STORAGE VALLEY.

Can you give me any information on the forcing of cold storage valley?

W. E. L.

When received, if the pips are frozen, allow them to thaw out before unpacking them. Then lay them in a tub of water for several hours. Valley, no matter whether cold storage or otherwise, likes a good bottom heat. Therefore, arrange your bed so that this can be given it. Of course, after the end of May bottom heat is less necessary, but it assists even in the summer months if you can apply a little. Plant the pips in six inches of clean sand. It is not necessary to change the sand for successive batches. Water the pips once a day until the flower spikes are advancing; then reduce the supply and be careful not to wet the flowers after they expand, or you will discolor them.

A case with a hinged or sliding cover should be used for the valley. Keep it close and dark for some days. As growth advances, air a little, and air more freely as the spikes appear. From this time onward also give more light, to make the flower stalks stiff and insure good foliage. A bottom heat of 80 to 85 degrees, with a top heat 20 degrees lower, suits valley. A portion of a raised bench is sometimes boarded in closely to get the needful bottom heat, while green baize or some other dark cloth is used to exclude light from the top and sides. After May 1 a close cold-frame answers well for valley. A little warm manure can be given as bottom heat. Lay a good layer of sand over this and treat in other respects the same as you would in the greenhouse. Usually three weeks will suffice to flower valley, provided you have the proper temperature. C. W.

GODETIA FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Please inform me through The Review if godetia can be had in bloom for Memorial day and how to treat it.

H. N.

In order to have such godetias as Lady Albemarle and The Bride in bloom for Memorial day the seed must be sown from February 15 to March 1. The best plan is to place half a dozen seeds in 3-inch pots and later transfer them to benches if wanted for cutting. If pot plants are desired, shift into 5-inch pots. Grow comparatively cool; an average night temperature of 45 degrees will suffice until the middle of April, when it can be raised 5 degrees.

C. W.

50 degrees at night is sufficiently high, as then the cuttings will be more stocky. The best cuttings are those rubbed off with a heel. They will root earlier than those which have been allowed to get long and have to be cut through with a knife. They are also less likely to damp off. A bottom heat of 75 degrees, with a top heat of 60 degrees, is ideal for rooting poinsettias in. Use a fairly coarse sand, keep them shaded from direct sun and water them on an average once a day, except when the weather is dark and damp. Pot up the cuttings as soon as the roots are an inch in length. Use 2-inch pots and a compost of loam, leaf-mold and sand. Give them a bench in a warm house. Shade for a few days and they will soon start away to make roots and growth. Be careful to take the cuttings out of the sand while the roots are short, as they are quite brittle. When making the cuttings, trim the leaves off pretty closely. If these directions are followed you should have little trouble in rooting cuttings. To stop bleeding, dip the bottoms of the cuttings or any other portions in powdered charcoal.

GARDENIA CULTURE.

Rooting the Cuttings.

Many growers of good stock in other lines fail or only partially succeed in growing gardenias; yet there is no particular difficulty in their culture where the requisite heat and moisture are maintained and the plants are kept clean.

Cuttings may be made at any time of the year when clean, flowerless shoots can be obtained. They root most freely when the wood is only half matured, and if taken with a heel, all the better. A brisk bottom heat should be given and the sand should be well firmed, whether pots or the ordinary propagating bench is used. The plants should not be allowed to make much root in the sand, but should be potted into 2-inch pots as soon as about half an inch of root is made.

In the Pots.

CARNATIONS IN NEW ENGLAND.

One of the progressive concerns in New England is the Queen City Floral Co., of Manchester, N. H., of which S. H. Mead & Co. are proprietors. Carnations are a leading specialty and the accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph of a house 28x365 in which the standard varieties are grown. Since wholesale and retail business is done, a general line of stock is grown and in the summer the grounds are so elaborately planted with bedding stock as to afford a fine example to the people of the town.

INSECTS ON CARNATIONS.

Last fall our houses were invaded by a host of little black bugs. They did not seem to disturb anything except the carnations. On these they ate the green from the upper side of the leaves, leaving it light colored, somewhat as do the red spiders. We sprayed and dusted all sorts of insecticides, but none seemed to drive them out or kill them. We also tried hydrocyanic acid gas, but still had these small, black, jumping bugs, until the arrival of cold weather. We notice them now, and coming all at once "as thick as hops," on the carnations only, so far. In the past a few which we think to be the same kind have been found on our smilax and also on our early vegetables outside. We enclose a few of the bodies of the insects, caught after a long chase and perhaps badly smashed. Is there a remedy? We found our carnations suffered in the fall from the war we waged against the bugs, but later rallied and came along satisfactorily.

R. B.

The insects enclosed with your query are strange to me and I regret to say that I can suggest no remedy which would likely be more successful than what you have already used. I can only suggest that, when you replant this summer, you fumigate the house thoroughly with sulphur before planting new stock. Send specimens to the state or government experiment station nearest to you. Perhaps they can identify it and advise you how to combat it.

POINSETTIA CUTTINGS.

Will you please give directions as to how to take poinsettia cuttings off the old plants, how to cut them, and how to handle them, in a general way, so as to root them successfully in sand?

J. B. D.

The old, dormant poinsettia plants should have been started before now. Do not give them too warm a house; growth the young plants must be allowed full sun and plenty of water. Often a flower bud will show as soon as the growth starts, and this must be at once removed and the growths pinched early, in order to induce a stocky, bushy growth. Pot firmly at all times, as firm wood is needed, and this does not follow potting in loose, rich soil. The best kind of compost in the early stages is a good, sound loam, with plenty of fiber from rotted sod; if this cannot be had, leaf-mold, peat or well-decayed manure should be added to the soil in its place. A plentiful sprinkling of sharp propagating sand must also be given.

At each potting it will be best to pinch the growth, to maintain a bushy habit and prevent the formation of flower buds, for the gardenia is of so free-flowering a character that these appear at every break.

On the Bench.

To have good stock for planting on the benches, a shift may be given to the 3-inch size, while, if the plants are to be raised in pots, the 5-inch size should be reached before allowing them to flower. Some growers never pot their plants for bench work at all, but bed them out thickly on a stock or growing bench and lift them again for transferring to their permanent quarters. Time is saved in this way, but in the hands of unskillful growers the young plants often receive too much water in the earlier stages, and they are safer in pots.

A frequent mistake is giving too great depth of soil. About three inches is ample for the start, and this can be added to in the form of top-dressings, which will cause the roots to come to the surface and ramify freely, giving hundreds of feeding points which are mighty useful to the plants. Here, again, the soil must be free and open, but firmly placed and rammed. Loose soil means soft growth, which is followed almost invariably by bud dropping.

Feeding.

With soil of good texture, as already described, feeding is not usually needed until the flower buds show in the points of the young growth, and it is then, if ever, that a little shading may be needed, in order to get length of stem. But strong, healthy plants will usually be long enough in stem without the shading, and the substance of the flowers will be better.

Almost any form of manure is suitable for feed, but soot is one of the finest in existence. Nothing I have ever tried has given such substance to the flowers and such rich, glossy green to the foliage as soot water, and it is almost impossible to overfeed with it, provided the soot is at least one year old before use. A little sheep manure and soot mixed, placed in a sack and allowed to steep in a tank, makes an ideal food for gardenias.

Spraying with Soot Water.

A form of feeding not much practiced, but highly suitable for gardenias, is by means of spraying overhead before the flowers show, and here, again, soot is fine for the purpose. Pure, old soot is steeped in water and well stirred; then it is allowed to settle and the clear portion at the top is dipped or siphoned off. This is mixed with clear water until the mixture is the color of weak tea or a pale amber, and this is sprayed on the plants two or three times a week. Pale foliage cannot exist where this form of feeding is practiced, and it makes insects of all kinds so uncomfortable that they leave the gardenias alone.

PRIMULAS AT DUNDEE.

With Lewis J. Brundage, proprietor of Sunnyside Farm, Dundee, N. Y., primulas are something of a specialty and the accompanying illustration shows some of his plants. These are all single plants and grown under ordinary conditions without any special feeding or forcing. The upper row shows on the left P. obconica grandiflora fimbriata and P. obconica grandiflora. The lower row shows P. obconica gigantea Kermesina, P. obconica gigantea fimbriata and P. obconica gigantea rosea. "We read a great deal about making up pans of those plants," says Mr. Brundage, "but it seems to us that if more were said about shifting this kind of plants as fast as possible into 5-inch and 6-inch and even larger pots, more profit would come to the grower. I think the majority of growers stop at 4-inch. This makes a cheap plant, and pretty for a time, but not as lasting as where more room has been given to the development of the plant. The plants shown are in 5-inch and 6-inch pots. I will continue experimenting and think it possible to fill even 10-inch pots with a single plant. I think we have greater possibilities in this plant than we yet know about."

GREENHOUSE

PROGRESS OF FIFTY YEARS.

The Earliest Houses.

It is a long step from the cumbersome greenhouse of fifty years ago to the modern, cobwebby structure of today. The early greenhouses were generally built against a high wall, the wall being on the north side. This was quite a factor in supplying heat during the night. You know how a piece of masonry will absorb heat when exposed to the warmth of the sun, and how warm it feels for a long time after the sun has ceased to shine upon it. So these high walls absorbed the heat and gave it up to the greenhouse during the night. In those days the only method of heating was by means of stoves, or a long flue, either of pipe or masonry, extending the entire length of the greenhouse, through which heated air generated by a furnace or flue heater was attempted to be carried. This method of heating was not satisfactory for the reason that unless the flues were frequently gone over and repaired there was always the danger of their giving out, which meant a serious loss of plants damaged by the gases and fumes which would escape into the greenhouse. This arrangement of heating was also unsatisfactory for the reason that that portion of the flue nearest the heater was naturally the hottest and the farthest end the coolest, which made it impossible to secure an even temperature throughout the greenhouse. Later this trouble was overcome to some extent by a hot water heating system arranged by placing a pipe coil inside the heater and connecting same by mains with heating coils placed at the coolest end of the greenhouse. Finally the flue heater was abandoned entirely and the heating accomplished altogether by a hot water heating apparatus.

Now as to the construction of the superstructure, a heavy wood sill was placed on top of the front wall. Heavy wood rafters were placed about three feet apart, extending from the sill to the ridge, and sashes glazed with glass only six inches wide were placed in the roof. The top sashes were arranged to slide down for ventilation and were operated with a system of ropes and pulleys.

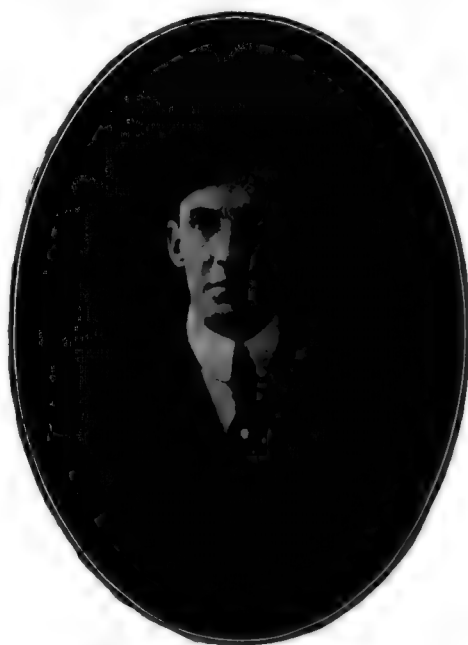

Progress Begins.

The crops raised in houses of this type were far from satisfactory, as you can readily realize, as with the amount of wood in their construction and the narrow glass, the percentage of light admitted was small, to say nothing of the cold air admitted through imperfect construction. Later full span houses were built of similar construction.

Mr. Lord, who was the founder of the Lord & Burnham Co., was a great lover of flowers and also a thorough mechanic. He had a small greenhouse in his yard which he had built himself. Mr. Lord became dissatisfied with the results obtained and made up his mind that if horticulture was to make any progress it would be necessary to greatly improve the construction of the greenhouse, so he built himself a house which proved to be so far ahead of anything then known that his services were soon in demand among the local community. It was not long before the success attained in these new houses spread beyond these narrow limits and the greenhouse business, as a business by itself, was launched.

It has continued from that time to grow until it has reached its present proportions. The outlook for its continued expansion, improvement and stability is bright indeed.

The principle of the construction adopted and built by Mr. Lord is the same as is universally used today, namely, building the roof as a permanent structure, with ventilating sashes at the ridge. This method increased the amount of light in the greenhouse and also furnished a weatherproof construction. Methods of supporting the roof members are today numerous, but they all are simply a means of making the principle stated above stable and lasting. In the early days there was no glass on the sides. Walls of brick or stone were built and the roof sprung directly from the top of these walls.

The inside level of the greenhouse was generally on a lower level than the outside grade. This was done to reduce the surfaces exposed to the outside air as much as possible. Most of the houses were narrow and the plant benches were so close to the glass that it was impossible to grow plants of any size except on the inner edge of the side benches and in the center benches.

The next step forward was to make the roof curved instead of straight. The roof was constructed with two radii, the lower one being about eight-foot radius, the upper forty-five feet. This gave more room for the plants on the outer sides of the side plant beds. The glass was not bent, but short lights were used and as the radius was large compared to the length of each light, the difficulty was solved the same as in building a curved part to a brick house with ordinary straight brick.

With the introduction of hot water and steam as a heating medium it became possible to increase the width of greenhouses, and houses twenty feet and twenty-five feet in width became common. This gave room for center plant benches. Next came the introduction of glass on the sides, increasing the height from the walk level to the gutter line. By doing this it was possible to build the roof without the curve and still have room on the side benches for medium-sized plants. The masonry wall was cut down to almost grade and wooden ventilating panels about two feet high placed on the sides below the top of the plant bench. This in a measure is an ideal way of ventilating a house where side ventilation is required, as the cool air from outside has to first pass over and around the heating pipes, which takes the chill from the air.

The Introduction of Iron.

At that time commercial houses were built with locust posts, set about three feet in the ground, four feet above and boarded up to the eaves. As the tendency towards wider houses increased and wood decreased in quality, it became necessary to find some material that would take the place of that then in use. Iron and steel as a building medium was at that time attracting attention and to this metal attention in the construction of greenhouses was turned. Cast iron sills for capping the masonry walls were therefore substituted for the three-piece wood sill. Iron rafters were substituted in place of the heavy wood ones. These iron rafters are capped with wood grooved to fit over the rafters and designed to receive the glass. By covering this portion of the steel frame with wood, all trouble from expansion and contraction of metal is avoided. Iron purlins were also substituted instead of wooden ones.

The first iron frame greenhouses to be built were those for Jay Gould, at Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y. Here the cast iron sills, iron rafters and purlins capped with wood were used to support the superstructure. The principle of this construction today is still used on all iron and steel greenhouses. The details may be changed, but the principle of having the iron or steel framework on the inside of the greenhouses, with all members on the outside which receive the glass, of wood, is the same. This construction, after repeated experiments, has proved to be the most durable and suitable to our variable climate and has stood the test well.

The next important step in the construction of commercial greenhouses was the introduction of what is known as the cast iron footpiece construction. A post or footpiece made of cast iron was placed in the ground about thirty inches, and to these steel rafters were bolted. The sides, up to within two feet of the eaves, were built of two thicknesses of boards, with building paper between. This made a cheap and substantial construction.

Next, wooden gutters and eaves plates were dropped out and angle iron used in place of the wood plate. The eaves plate is fully one-third smaller than the wood one and many times as strong; it strengthened the greenhouse at its vital point. The bars and rafter caps were fastened to this angle iron with a small cast iron fitting. The eaves plate, having part of its surface exposed to the inside temperature of the greenhouse, conveys the heat to the outside surfaces and, to a certain extent, prevents the formation of icicles on the outside. Certainly it was and is a great improvement over the wood plate, which was one of the first members in a greenhouse to decay.

Larger Glass Comes In.

During all this time the distance between the rafters has steadily increased, the wood members being made smaller and the width of the glass increased. From glass six inches wide to twenty-four inches is the history, although for many reasons of economy glass sixteen inches wide has been and is generally used. The light admitted has been greatly increased. There is no perceptible difference in the amount of light in a house glazed with 16-inch and 24-inch glass, and the majority of the leading growers claim the growing qualities are approximately the same. Most people prefer the 16-inch, as it costs less to replace a broken light, and also a tighter roof can be made with this width glass. If you examine the edge of a light of glass, you will notice that the glass is wavy and not perfectly straight, so that when two lights of glass are lapped you will find that there is a certain amount of open space between the lights of glass. The wider the glass the more uneven it is.

With the light construction now used I do not believe it makes any difference in cases where a greenhouse is used for growing a general assortment of plants whether a house is built facing south, east or west, providing there are no trees, hills or other objects to shade the house. The topographical conditions of the site play an important part in the location. As these usually vary in each case, each case requires individual consideration. Of course where growers desire a greenhouse for roses or carnations, etc., as a specialty, more consideration and attention is given in this direction. More sunlight is obtained by placing the greenhouse east and west, so that the sun at noon, when at its strongest, shines directly between the bars and rafters in the roof. I understand from some of the largest rose growers that it is an advantage to place the house from 10 to 15 degrees north of east in order to get the advantage of the morning sun a trifle earlier. The morning sun is, of course, more beneficial than the afternoon sun, it being an advantage to start vegetation as early in the morning as possible.

The Width Still Increases.

As the glass has increased in width, so has the width of the houses, so that now houses thirty, forty, fifty, fifty-five, sixty and seventy-two feet wide are common. Some have been built over 100 feet in width, but in order to reduce the height of the ridge as much as possible the roofs are usually designed with a flat pitch. It is doubtful if houses as wide as this are a success unless built on a sloping ground, so that the roof can have sufficient slope to properly shed the water and not have a shower on the inside of the greenhouse as well as on the outside.

A pitch of 32 degrees in houses up to thirty feet in width is preferable, and in those from thirty to fifty feet 28 degrees has been found a good angle for roofs; 26 degrees is satisfactory for houses fifty feet wide and over.

Now as to supports: A 30-foot house requires no columns. Those thirty-five or forty feet wide require two columns; fifty-five to sixty feet width calls for four columns, and seventy feet calls for six columns. Houses seventy or seventy-two feet wide require only four rows of columns if they are used in combination with compression trusses.

There are some greenhouses constructed today in which the principle of construction is to truss the roofs, thus eliminating columns to a great extent. This would be more satisfactory if the trusses were constructed on a compression basis, but they are constructed to a large extent on a tension basis, and depend upon all members being constantly in tune, as it were. Now there is considerable vibration in a greenhouse roof and the constant movement is bound to stretch the light rods, etc., which are used in this construction. As soon as one member loses its tune, it puts all the others out also, and I believe that a greenhouse constructed on this principle will deteriorate more rapidly than one supported by columns or with a combination of columns and compression trusses.

Semi-Iron or Pipe Frame Construction.

We have been considering what is known as the iron frame construction. There is another type known as the pipe frame or semi-iron construction. The difference between the two is not great, the difference being that the steel rafters are omitted in the semi-iron construction and the roof bars, etc., are supported by longitudinal purlins made of pipe or angle iron; I believe pipe is preferable, for the reason that it casts the least amount of shade. These purlins are in turn supported by pipe columns. The painting and glazing in this construction are the same as in the houses where iron rafters are used. There is a slight saving in the cost of this house, as the steel used is less and the parts require less mill work.

CATTLEYS AT DALE'S.

At the Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont., there are eight houses, each 16x100 feet, devoted to cattleyas. These houses contain over 33,000 plants and it is said that nothing on the place affords equal interest for visitors. Perhaps one of the reasons for this is that the Dale people have had rather exceptional success with orchids, the houses seldom being without a brave show of bloom. The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph made in one of the Dale houses just before Easter. The variety is Schroederæ. The splendid character of the crop will be apparent at a glance.

The light admitted has been greatly increased. There is no perceptible difference in the amount of light in a house glazed with 16 inch and 24 inch glass, and the majority of the leading growers claim the growing qualities are approximately the same. Most people prefer the 16 inch, as it costs less to replace a broken light, and also a tighter roof can be made with this width glass. If you examine the edge of a light of glass, you will notice that the glass is wavy and not perfectly straight, so that when two lights of glass are lapped you will find that there is a certain amount of open space between the lights of glass. The wider the glass the more uneven it is.

With the light construction now used I do not believe it makes any difference in cases where a greenhouse is used for growing a general assortment of plants whether a house is built facing south, east or west, providing there are no trees, hills or other objects to shade the house. The topographical conditions of the site play an important part in the location. As these usually vary in each case, each case requires individual consideration. Of course where growers desire a greenhouse for roses or carnations, etc., as a specialty, more consideration and attention is given in this direction. More sunlight is obtained by placing the greenhouse east and west, so that the sun at noon, when at its strongest, shines directly between the bars and rafters in the roof. I understand from some of the largest rose growers that it is an advantage to place the house from 10 to 15 degrees north of east in order to get the advantage of the morning sun a trifle earlier. The morning sun is, of course, more beneficial than the afternoon sun, it being an advantage to start vegetation as early in the morning as possible.

The Width Still Increases.

As the glass has increased in width, so has the width of the houses, so that now houses thirty, forty, fifty, fifty-five, sixty and seventy-two feet wide are common. Some have been built over 100 feet in width, but in order to reduce the height of the ridge as much as possible the roofs are usually designed with a flat pitch. It is doubtful if houses as wide as this are a success unless built on a sloping ground, so that the roof can have sufficient slope to properly shed the water and not have a shower on the inside of the greenhouse as well as on the outside.

A pitch of 32 degrees in houses up to thirty feet in width is preferable, and in those from thirty to fifty feet 28 degrees has been found a good angle for roofs; 26 degrees is satisfactory for houses fifty feet wide and over.

Now as to supports: A 30 foot house requires no columns. Those thirty-five or forty feet wide require two columns; fifty-five to sixty feet width calls for four columns, and seventy feet calls for six columns. Houses seventy or seventy-two feet wide require only four rows of columns if they are used in combination with compression trusses.

There are some greenhouses constructed today in which the principle of construction is to truss the roofs, thus eliminating columns to a great extent. This would be more satisfactory if the trusses were constructed on a compression basis, but they are constructed to a large extent on a tension basis, and depend upon all members being constantly in tune, as it were. Now there is considerable vibration in a greenhouse roof and the constant movement is bound to stretch the light rods, etc., which are used in this construction. As soon as one member loses its tune, it puts all the others out also, and I believe that a greenhouse constructed on this principle will deteriorate more rapidly than one supported by columns or with a combination of columns and compression trusses.

Semi-Iron or Pipe Frame Construction.

We have been considering what is known as the iron frame construction. There is another type known as the pipe frame or semi-iron construction. The difference between the two is not great, the difference being that the steel rafters are omitted in the semi-iron construction and the roof bars, etc., are supported by longitudinal purlins made of pipe or angle iron; I believe pipe is preferable, for the reason that it casts the least amount of shade. These purlins are in turn supported by pipe columns. The painting and glazing in this construction are the same as in the houses where iron rafters are used. There is a slight saving in the cost of this house, as the steel used is less and the parts require less mill work.

CATTLEYAS AT DALE'S.

At the Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont., there are eight houses, each 16x100 feet devoted to cattleyas. These houses contain over 33,000 plants and it is said that nothing on the place affords equal interest for visitors. Perhaps one of the reasons for this is that the Dale people have had rather exceptional success with orchids, the houses seldom being without a brave show of bloom. The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph made in one of the Dale houses just before Easter. The variety is Schroederæ. The splendid character of the crop will be apparent at a glance.

LATEST FACTS ON FUMIGATION

RESULTS OF RECENT RESEARCH.

Thrips and Plant Lice.

So far as we now know, thrips may be killed by the use of nicotine extracts, of which there are several on the market. Recent tests of materials containing forty per cent of nicotine have been made, using an ounce to every 1,000 cubic feet of space. The extract was evaporated over small lamps or stoves, and to prevent scorching was considerably diluted with water. It was carried on all night in a moist atmosphere and the house was not opened until morning. Every thrips in the house was killed in this way. A similar test with hydrocyanic acid gas gave an equally good result, but it is certainly unwise to use a gas so dangerous to human life when a less dangerous treatment proves equally effective. It should be remembered that the house in which these tests were made was probably rather tighter than most houses would be.

Plant lice are, as a rule, more easily controlled than thrips, and it is probable that the treatment just described would prove effective against them also. If any of the thrips are in the egg stage, however, it is questionable whether such would be destroyed in this way, and it would be well to watch carefully after such a treatment, for a week or ten days, for young thrips which may have hatched, and repeat the dose if any are found, fourteen days after the first fumigation.

White Fly.

The white fly is more resistant than plant lice, and probably than thrips, to nicotine. Accordingly, hydrocyanic acid gas is generally necessary for the control of this pest. It has been found, however, that in many cases a fumigation sufficiently strong to destroy these insects in all stages is too strong for the plants they are on. Usually, when it is first noticed, all stages of this pest are present together. Fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas, using from seven-thousandths to one-hundredth of a gram of cyanide per cubic foot (twenty-five-hundredths to thirty-five-hundredths of an ounce per 1,000 cubic feet), according to the tightness of the house, for three hours after dark, will kill the adults and most of the larvæ, without injury to the plants. Fourteen days later the eggs will have hatched into larvæ and can be killed by a second treatment, but the pupæ which escaped the first treatment will have turned into adults, some of which, at least, will have laid eggs. In order to get the remainder, therefore, a third treatment, again fourteen days later, will be necessary to destroy the last of these pests.

Beyond these facts we know little in detail. Two-hundredths of a gram of cyanide per cubic foot (seven-tenths of an ounce per 1,000 cubic feet) will kill thrips, but in many cases at least is dangerous to plants. Thus with the cucumber, in experiments carried on at the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station, one-third of an ounce per 1,000 cubic feet for forty minutes was about as strong as was safe for the plants, while in Maryland three-quarters of an ounce for the same area, left followed by the scales and lastly by the red spider, which seems to be particularly resistant to hydrocyanic acid gas. In all cases the eggs are more resistant than the other stages, and this may be due to the extremely small amount of oxygen required for development in this stage, so that a long exposure would be necessary for their destruction.

As regards the strength of gas different plants can stand without injury, we are almost without information. Various statements have been published with reference to one kind or another, but usually with no details. Thus the Easter lily has been reported as suffering no injury by exposure to two ounces of cyanide over night, but the temperature of the house, its humidity, and whether the house was tight or so loose that the gas had all escaped after an hour or two, are all unknown, though any one of these factors might make all the difference in the world in the result. Comparing all the data we have, however, it seems probable that we should regard young chrysanthemums, the sweet pea, coreopsis, mignonette, carnation, asparagus fern, pellaea, tradescantia and tomato as among the more delicate plants, fumigation of which must be given with caution. How far this list should be extended is as yet unknown.

Temperature and Humidity.

The effect of temperature upon fumigation is almost entirely unknown. A few experiments along this line, made at the experiment station here, would indicate that temperature is not an important factor, but that, on the whole, a lower temperature is preferable to a higher one.

The same appears to be true to some extent of humidity, though there is some evidence to show that when the atmosphere of the house is moist there is more danger of injury than where this is not the case.

On the whole, the results of experimental work seem to suggest that there is more danger to plants fumigated for a long time with a small amount of gas, than to those exposed to a larger amount for a shorter period. Ultimately it will probably be found that somewhere between these two extremes is an optimum exposure with a correspondingly effective amount of gas, though data on this point are at present entirely lacking.

Relation of Light to Safety.

Finally we come to the question of the relation of light to safety in fumigation. Here, at last, we have at least a little definite knowledge. Fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas cannot be safely carried on during the daytime and there is liable to be some injury all night, caused no injury. In such cases it is probable that the difference was at least in part due to a difference in the tightness of the houses used for the experiments.

Effectiveness and Safety.

At the present time the following is about as far as we can go in stating the relative resistance of different insects to fumigation: Plant lice, except in the egg state, are probably the most easily destroyed of greenhouse pests. Next would come thrips and the white fly, though here, too, the eggs are noticeably more resistant than the other stages, and probably at least a second treatment after these hatch will always be necessary. Mealy bugs would perhaps come next in the list, to plants even on moonlight nights, remarkable as it may seem. This has been so often demonstrated in experiments, both at the Massachusetts Experiment Station and elsewhere, that it cannot longer be doubted. Fumigation with cyanide, therefore, should not be begun before dark, nor after dark when there is bright moonlight, if a strength of fumigation anywhere near the maximum safe for the kind of plant treated is to be used.

Just why light should have an injurious effect is by no means certain. A few suggestions on this subject, however, may not be out of place. It is known that green plants in the light take in carbonic acid and give off oxygen. Both during the day and at night the plant is also performing the reverse process; that is, taking in oxygen and giving off carbonic acid, though in the daytime this is masked by the other action, which is much the greater of the two. Both processes are carried on at the leaves, and in these, particularly on the under surface, are numerous openings known as stomata, surrounded by guard cells which have the power of enlarging and contracting and thus of making the stomatal openings smaller or larger. As the two processes work together in the daytime, it would seem as though the stomata would at least be likely to be more widely open at that time and become smaller at night, and if so, the smaller the openings the less opportunity there would be for the entrance of the gas into the leaf substance to injure it. This, however, is as yet purely speculative.

Sodium, a Substitute for Potassium.

During the last few years the possibility of using cyanides other than that of potassium has received some consideration, as several of these are well known to chemists. Of them all, but one seems to be available for fumigation, the others being too costly or too difficult to obtain. This possible substitute for potassium cyanide is sodium cyanide. Our main commercial deposits of the potassium compounds necessary for the production of potassium cyanide are located in Germany, while the sodium compounds needed for the manufacture of sodium cyanide are widely distributed. Then, too, sodium cyanide is now being manufactured more abundantly than the other and its unit price is at present rather less than that of potassium cyanide. From these facts it would seem that the substitution of sodium cyanide for potassium cyanide is worthy of some consideration.

Relative Strength of Sodium.

Sodium cyanide is commonly compared with potassium cyanide; that is, the amount of cyanogen in the two is the standard of comparison. Chemically pure potassium cyanide would, of course, be 100 per cent pure, while chemically pure sodium cyanide would be 133 per cent pure. This rather remarkable statement may be explained by stating that, taking the same weights of the two substances pure, there is about one-third more cyanogen in the sodium cyanide than in the potassium salt. If, then, a pound of pure sodium cyanide cost the same as a pound of pure potassium cyanide, it would be much more profitable to use the former, because of the extra amount of hydro-cyanic acid gas it would produce. The cost is not the same, however, the sodium salt being the more expensive. To obtain the same amount of gas from either material at the same cost, we can afford to pay one-fourth more for the sodium salt, as this gives at least one-fourth more of the gas. At present the price for the sodium cyanide is not quite one-fourth more than for the other kind, so there is a slight saving by its use—perhaps two or three cents per pound.

Purity of Sodium Cyanide.

The purity of the sodium cyanide is, however, an important point. An impurity present in all but the highest grades of this substance is sodium chloride, common salt. Now, when sulphuric acid is added to such a grade of cyanide it attacks the sodium cyanide, producing sodium sulphate and hydrocyanic acid gas. But some of the sulphuric acid attacks the sodium chloride, changing it into sodium sulphate and hydrochloric acid.

This hydrochloric acid immediately attacks the hydrocyanic acid gas, decomposing it to a great extent, and thus largely preventing the fumigation. Hence cyanide of sodium, to be suitable for fumigation, must be practically free from sodium chloride.

Accordingly, if sodium cyanide is to be used, it should be insisted that it must be the 124 per cent pure, or above this, and grades "100 per cent" or less should be rejected.

The Dose of Sodium Cyanide.

With a cyanide containing one-fourth more cyanide than the potassium salt, the dose should, of course, be correspondingly reduced. If the dose with potassium cyanide was one ounce for a definite area, with sodium cyanide it would become three quarters of an ounce.

The best proportions of chemicals to use with sodium cyanide appear to be: For each ounce of cyanide by weight, one and one-half fluid ounces of sulphuric acid and two fluid ounces of water. If the cyanide be of high grade—124 per cent or higher—and free from sodium chloride, fumigation with these proportions of materials should be as successful as with the other cyanide. The time of exposure would be the same.

On the whole, sodium cyanide seems to promise well as a substitute for potassium cyanide, if only high grades are used, so long as the price per pound is less than one-fourth more than the price for the same amount of the other substances.

E. R. FRY.

E. R. Fry, of Rochester, N. Y., is one of that city's most enterprising and aggressive florists and growers. He is noted among his acquaintances for his genial personality, as well as for his enthusiastic love of flowers and floriculture. He was born of English parentage in the town of Greece, N. Y., near Rochester, and began work in the florists' business when a mere boy. In the early years he had a retail store on Main street, Rochester, which he conducted for five years. Then he bought the property on Cottage street, where he now has his residence and greenhouses. His establishment is situated on an elevation, overlooking the Genesee river and a part of the Genesee valley, and the site is an admirable one for a grower, on account of the abundance of light and sunshine. He has 9,000 square feet of glass and grows carnations, chrysanthemums, Boston ferns, flowering and bedding plants, for his own use, but he reports that he can not grow enough to supply his own trade. He ships pansy seedlings to different parts of the country. He is also growing a few streptocarpus, which, though a highly decorative plant, is somewhat rare in his city.

A little over a year ago Mr. Fry purchased from J. O. Pridmore a greenhouse containing a small salesroom, on Lyell avenue, about one mile from the city line, and at this place, also, he is doing a prosperous business. E. C. A.

PLANTING IN THE FIELD.

It is always well to plant out the violet stock before the weather becomes too warm. Violets succeed best when the ground is cool and moist and do not make much growth during the hot summer months. They do much better when planted out early. This allows them to become established before they get torrid heat. The ground for them should have been liberally manured, plowed and well harrowed. The singles, such as Princess of Wales, should not be less than twelve inches apart in the rows. If hand cultivators are to be used, eighteen inches between the rows will suffice. If horse cultivation is wanted, leave at least twenty-four inches. Choose if possible a cool, cloudy day to plant out the young stock. Try to get a little ball of soil on each, and be sure the soil is well moistened. It is simply a waste of time and energy to plant out violets or, for that matter, any other plants, with dry roots. Never mind if rain does seem imminent. It often does not come when expected and then only in sufficient volume to moisten the surface soil. The grower who is careless enough to bed out any plants with dry roots deserves to lose them. This applies not only to violets, but to all flower and vegetable plants and trees and shrubs of every kind.

With double violets, such as Marie Louise, Lady Hume Campbell, Swanley White and Farquhar, the plants can go eight to nine inches apart in the rows, and the rows as near as twelve inches apart where hand hoeing can be done. While the single violets succeed well in full sunshine, I have had fine doubles where they have had a little shade from buildings or tall trees. Shade, however, is not necessary, as many of the best specialists in doubles grow them in the full sun. If any violets, double or single, are planted out early, while the ground is cool and moist, and are kept thoroughly cultivated all summer, they should make good growth, unless, peradventure, protracted heat or attacks of red spider should cripple them. It is surprising, however, what a lot of drought even violets will stand if a fine, loose mulch of soil is kept about them.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Poinsettias.

If the poinsettia stock plants were started as advised a few weeks ago they will now be carrying a nice crop of cuttings, which should be taken off before they are too long, and inserted in a propagating bench where they will have a good bottom heat. The cuttings root most easily and quickly and are the least liable to damp off when taken off with a heel. When they are allowed to become long and have to be cut below a leaf there is always greater danger of their damping in the cutting bench. As a rule one watering a day will suffice while cuttings are in the sand. On dark days none may be needed. Be sure not to allow any sun to strike the cuttings until they are rooted. Once they are badly wilted they might as well be thrown away. Do not leave cuttings in the sand after they have roots an inch in length, as they are easily broken. Give small pots at the start and be sure to keep close and shaded until established. Where stock plants are not yet started it would be well to place them in heat now, as a few weeks will elapse before they will carry cuttings of propagating size.

Primulas.

The early sown primulas will now be well established in flats and within a few days should go into 2½-inch pots. Use a light compost for them, containing plenty of leaf-mold with just a little fine manure added. All these greenhouse annuals grow well in a light soil at the first potting. In a retentive loam they are not at home at all, and to heavy, clayey soils, sand and leaf-mold should be added freely. Where leaf-mold is unprocurable, some well decayed hotbed manure or mushroom manure passed through a fine screen may be used with advantage. All the primroses like a cool house and are benefited by a little shade. Just as soon as Memorial day and the rush of bedding out is over, move them into a coldframe, which is the ideal location for them in summer.

Gardenias.

Where an early batch of gardenia cuttings was inserted early in April in a propagating house with a brisk bottom heat the cuttings should now be rooted and ready to pot off. Give them a close, stuffy, moist atmosphere after potting, and give them frequent light sprayings until established. The present is an opportune time to do more propagating. As with many other plants, heel cuttings root more quickly than any others. The great secret in rooting gardenias is to keep the cuttings constantly sprayed over. One damping over a day is entirely inadequate. For the first three weeks keep the leaves constantly damp and few will fail to root. This treatment would soon rot mums and other soft wood cuttings, but gardenias, with their hard wood, just revel in it.

Berried Solanums.

Plant out the young berried solanums any time now. Never mind if they get a light freezing; it will not hurt them in the least. These plants are not tender subjects and it is a good plan to get the hardier plants outdoors before the real hustle and rush commence. Plant twelve to fifteen inches apart in the rows in good soil and you will get much finer plants and more heavily berried than if you kept them growing in pots all summer. Plants you raised from cuttings will fruit earlier than the seedlings, but the latter have more vigor, are of a stronger and more bushy habit and will make you the finest Christmas plants.

Cyclamens.

With the rush of other spring work, there is great danger of overlooking those useful winter plants, the cyclamens. Not infrequently we see them in flats or pots with the surface soil coated with slime and the plants half choked in weeds. Good plants cannot be expected if this treatment is tolerated. Keep weeds pulled out and endeavor to give time to transplant or pot over any needing it. A few minutes' labor may mean a big difference in the selling value of your plants next winter. Use a light soil, with plenty of sand in it, and pot moderately firm. Keep the plants on a bench or shelf where they get a little shade from the direct sun's rays and where they have a night temperature of 50 to 54 degrees. You will hardly be able to spare frame room for them yet, but as soon as you have cleared out a few sashes of bedding plants, move the cyclamens into coldframes.

Lilium Speciosum.

Plants of Lilium speciosum being grown for summer flowering should have a light house, without much shade. Give them an abundance of air at all times, as speciosums resent coddling. As buds show on the flowering stems, it will be well to give them some support. The stalks may keep erect now, but it will be otherwise when the flowers start to open. Be sure you do not allow any green fly to get a foothold on the plants or you will find many of the flowers will be ruined by it. What applies to L. speciosum applies with equal force to L. auratum and, in fact, to all lilies. Don't wait until you see plants alive with pests and then fumigate or spray; always remember that prevention is better than cure.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Wm. F. Kasting.

Mrs. Laura A. Kasting, wife of William F. Kasting, the well-known Buffalo florist, died at the German hospital, in that city, May 4, following an operation for gall stones. She was 33 years of age. The operation, which was the third in two years, was performed on the preceding day. Mrs. Kasting had been suffering for so long a time that her condition was not strong enough to withstand the shock attending the operation. She rallied for a brief period, but subsequently had a relapse that ended in her death. Mr. Kasting, who had been with her constantly during her illness, was at her side when she passed away.

Besides her husband, she is survived by three children of tender years, William, 10; Laura, 8, and John, 2½ years old. Mr. and Mrs. Kasting had returned from Atlantic City but a few days before, where they had gone hoping to benefit Mrs. Kasting's health. The funeral was held Tuesday, May 7, from Notre Dame de Lourdes.

H. Potet.

H. Potet, one of San Francisco's pioneer growers and florists, died in Oakland, Cal., April 28, aged 67 years. He started in business in San Francisco early in the seventies, with a retail store on Sixth street, near Market street, and several acres of ground near San Bruno road. In a few years he had built up one of the largest businesses there, both in growing and in store trade. After being actively engaged in the business for over twenty-five years, he acquired a competency and retired about ten years ago. He is survived by a widow and two children. He was a native of France.

BOSTON.

The Market.

So far we have not had any warm weather and cut flowers of all kinds are still of remarkably good quality. Business also has been quite satisfactory and clearances on most days have been good. Carnations continue to keep up their winter quality, and even Enchantress still is fine. Some growers are rather off crop now and the supply is not excessive. Pink Delight continues good, and among white both White Enchantress and White Perfection are fine. The old Fair Maid is now coming in of excellent quality from one or two growers. This is popular as a summer sort here. Roses are a little lower in price, but there is no glut of them as yet. Double violets are making their adieu this week. Sweet peas sell well. They are less plentiful than a few weeks ago. With the passing of violets they are more in demand. Indoor grown Dutch bulbous stock is about over, but there are now plenty of both tulips and narcissi from the open.

Antirrhinums are abundant and low in price for their quality. Mignonette is getting small and is hard to move. Valley has a fair sale, but lilies and callas go slowly. Marguerites are remarkably fine and in demand; so are Spanish irises. Gladioli are not yet abundant. Cattleya Mossiae is coming in more freely and relieves a temporary scarcity in orchids. Gardenias are still of good quality. Adiantum and asparagus are a little better in quality. Trade in bedding plants is starting in, and the call for geraniums is quite strong.

Various Notes.

At the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, James Marlborough, superintendent to F. E. Procter, of Topsfield, Mass., will read a paper on "Indoor Fruits." Mr. Marlborough is an expert grower and secured a gold medal for a noteworthy exhibit in Horticultural hall last fall.

Arnold & Petros, the Boylston street florists, have dissolved partnership, and the business will be continued by James M. Petros. The firm has done an excellent business from the start.

J. T. Butterworth, of South Framingham, has an unusually fine lot of Cattleya Mossiae this season. His miltonias are also better than ever.

An interesting show of hardy bulbous flowers, calceolarias, pelargoniums, etc., will be held at Horticultural hall May 11 and 12.

The W. W. Edgar Co., of Waverley, has a grand lot of bedding plants, hydrangeas, etc., for Memorial day trade and is experiencing a strong demand for geraniums at present.

President Sim, Secretary Bunyard and local members of the committees appointed for the coming sweet pea exhibition, met at Horticultural hall May 4. Several new prizes were announced and preliminary work on the coming show was well advanced.

The Boston parkways are now attractive. The forsythias, early spiræas, magnolias, prunus and other shrubs are now making a fine display of bloom. At the Arnold Arboretum the malus collection will be in good bloom about May 15. One or two of the early lilacs are already starting to open.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club will hold a field day at the estate of Bayard Thayer, South Lancaster, Mass., May 17. William Anderson is superintendent here, and the displays of bulbs and other spring flowers, malus, lilacs, etc., will be in fine condition at the date named.

H. L. Belcher, of Winthrop, says he has never had a better bulb season. He is now cutting the last of his indoor crop, but will have fine valley for some time yet.

J. H. Leach & Sons' new carnation, Pink Supreme, is now blooming even better than in winter. The stems are strong and the flowers hold their beautiful shrimp pink color well.

The Boston Public Gardens are now a riot of color, the annual tulip display being at its height. Nothing is finer than Pink Beauty. Other fine bedders are White Pottebakker, Joost van Vondel, Prince of Austria, Couleur Cardinal, Proserpine, Keizerskroon, Chrysolora, Queen of the Netherlands and Cottage Maid.

George T. Elliott, the eldest son of W. H. Elliott, has the felicitations of a host of friends here on his marriage April 25 at Morton Grove, Ill., to Miss Alma Brochart.

William Sim has his violet houses planted with tomatoes. He has one large house which he is devoting to sweet peas for summer blooming. He is picking quantities of fine sweet peas and pansies.

More than usual interest is being taken this year in Mothers' day. All the newspapers have taken it up and have inserted editorial notes and special articles dealing with it and florists are preparing for a bigger demand than usual as a result of this publicity.

H. M. Robinson & Co. report excellent business during April and shipping trade holds up splendidly. They are more than pleased with the business being done at their New York branch.

Part 1 of the Transactions of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for 1911 has been issued. It contains premium lists, committees, reports, etc., and is freely illustrated.

W. N. Craig.

H. R. Hackel, of H. M. Robinson & Co., is said to be engaged to a young lady at New Bedford, the date for the wedding having been set for June.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Market.

During the last week stock has been fairly plentiful—the supply just about equaled the demand. Prices are about the same as usually prevail during the month of May; carnations are running from $15 to $20 per thousand and roses brought anywhere from $2 to $12 per hundred for the best, but the other grades, of which there are great quantities coming in from all sources, are going to the street men at about their own figures. American Beauties have met a ready sale, being advertised by the stores at from $1 per dozen up, the wholesale prices being from $4 to $25 per hundred. There has also been a ready demand for southern grown American Beauties in the northern markets and large orders are daily being filled for shipment to Philadelphia, New York and other cities. Sweet peas have been in good supply, but the demand is not heavy, with the result that they can be had at any price from 30 cents to $1 per hundred, according to grade.

The weather of the last few days has not been the best that could be desired for good results with roses and many of the growers who retail their stock have had to accept lower prices than those which would ordinarily prevail, due partly to the poor condition of the foliage and to the effect of mildew on the buds.

Although the lilac season is about at an end, there is still plenty of dogwood, and wild azaleas and snowballs are just bursting into bloom. These flowers are being brought into the market in large quantities and are materially hurting the sale of greenhouse stock; in fact, the standard flowers, such as roses, carnations and similar blooms, are a drug on the market.

Spring flowers, such as snapdragon, lupine, stocks, etc., are in good demand and are bringing fair prices.

The plant business received a big boom last week and the market men are well pleased with results. Saturday the sale of heliotrope, ageratum, verbenas and similar plants was exceptionally large, prices running from 5 cents to 30 cents per plant.

Various Notes.

Work on the building which is to be the new home of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., on H street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, N. W., is progressing rapidly. The building

Results bring advertising.
 The Review brings results.

WORK has been begun on a revised edition of Bailey's Cyclopedia of American Horticulture.

FOUR double-page spreads again in this issue. The business card stage of advertising has been passed by The Review.

NEXT week's issue of The Review will be the one that will be of greatest value to advertisers who want business for Memorial day.

THE good old rubber plant appears to have gone the same way as its erstwhile companion, Latania Borbonica—hardly anyone growing them now.

It costs more to sell goods nowadays than it used to cost—but florists still are getting business cheaply compared to what sales cost in other lines.

IN spite of repeated statements that no attention is paid to inquiries that do not bear the writer's full name and address, they continue to come to hand, even on unsigned postal cards.

NOT a few subscribers save themselves
 the bother of annual renewal by sending
 The Review $2, $3, or sometimes $5, instead of the dollar-bill that insures fifty-
 two visits of the paper.

SPEAKING of quick results: Last week's issue of The Review, carrying a double-page spread advertising an automobile tire filler much used by florists, was mailed to subscribers Thursday afternoon.
 Saturday morning's mail brought the advertiser eighteen clipped coupons, from as far away as Pittsburgh.

THE lady florists are anxious for a Fathers' day, and several of them write
 The Review about it at least once each season, about the date of Mothers' day.
 But, unfortunately, father does not seem to awaken the same sympathetic response that came with the suggestion for the observance of the second Sunday in May.
 In fact, the suggestion of a Fathers' day causes nothing but a smile. Forget it.

BUSINESS EMBARRASMENTS.

Worcester, Mass.—A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed April 29 by Charles D. Mackie. His liabilities are $11,453, of which $7,820 is unsecured. His assets are estimated at $8,300.

ORDERS COME TOO FAST.

For each of the last two issues The Review has carried thirteen solid pages of classified plant advertisements—every line charged for—in spite of the fact that advertisers sell out so fast that frequently it is necessary to cut out before the number of insertions ordered have been given:

We shall have to ask you to omit our advertisement in the Classified list until further notice, as the orders are coming faster than we can handle them.—R. R. Davis Co., Morrison, Ill., April 30, 1912.

Those who have surplus stock and who have not yet tried The Review's classified plant advertisements are missing something to their advantage.

JASMINE CROP LATE.

In regard to your inquiry about the jasmine crop here at Alvin this year, we wish to say it is hard to predict at present just what the crop will be for Decoration day. We think there will be a few blooms by then, but the main part of the crop will be a week or two late. The cool weather held them back, and they have just begun to form a bud and put on new foliage within the last two weeks. We will know more fully about May 20.

Woodward Floral Co.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Business for the first week in May has been about up to the usual standard, a few houses being able to report some increase over last season. The shipping demand is the main reliance, there being nothing special doing in the city. Weddings are not numerous this month, and the call for the flowers used in wedding work is less active than it was in April, following Easter.

The several days of unseasonably warm weather have resulted in a large increase in the supply of flowers, but the effect on roses has been much more apparent than on any other stock.
 Roses have come in so much heavier than during the last week in April that prices are considerably weakened. An extremely large percentage of the receipts grades in the short-stemmed class and these are the roses that are moved with greatest difficulty. The buyers make the prices. Medium and long-stemmed roses are so few in proportion to the total cut that prices on these are much better maintained. The heat has impaired the quality of practically all roses and the wholesalers are compelled to do much more sorting than at any time previously this season to get out the shipping stock. Killarney and White Killarney, of course, predominate, but there are good cuts of Richmond. Mrs. Ward is more abundant than it has been, and both Ward, Melody and Bulgarie sell quickly. The list has been reinforced by the first shipments of Sunburst.

Beauty crops have multiplied several fold. Prices have taken a drop. Indeed, so rapidly did receipts increase last week that telegrams offering sharp concessions in prices were resorted to in the effort to move the accumulation. There are all lengths of Beauties in quantity, and all qualities in quantity.

Carnations are doing well this week, just the opposite of most other items. Apparently the growers are shipping no more than is necessary, in anticipation of the special demand for Mothers' day, which will come in the latter days of the week. It is assured that all strictly first-class carnations will sell at fair prices, irrespective of color, but it is too much to expect that overripe stock will find a market—no one would insult his mother by using that kind of stuff.

Butterfly sweet peas have arrived in a flood this week; the receipts are several times what they were in the week preceding. The quality is extremely fine and the stock is selling fully as well as anything else on the list. The winter-flowering varieties are passing out; they cannot be sold in competition with the Butterfly peas, even at considerably smaller prices.

There continue to be moderate quantities of bulbous stock, but the demand has subsided; evidently the public does not fancy bulbous flowers after Easter. The first peonies arrived this week, and from now on this flower is likely to dominate the market to a greater or less extent.

Valley is easier than it was, and orchids have come in so much more heavily that prices have dropped off practically one-third. The leading cattleya growers state that there will be big cuts between now and Memorial day, and the hint is given the buyers that orchids can be featured to advantage during the next three weeks. Lilies are less abundant, but still equal to all demands.

Make Your Memorial Day Advertising Pay

It surely will if you use this attractive cut for the heading of your ad. It drew your attention, so will it draw customers to your store. Get the start of your competitors and take this service—only one Florist in each city can have it. Sit right down and write us now.

Snapdragons continue in overabundant supply and the quality is not so good as it was, with the result that much of the stock is difficult to sell at a price that will reimburse the growers. Gladiolus Colvillei is coming in plentifully; the principal variety is Blushing Bride. Spanish iris is not so abundant as it was and is making seasonable prices. The outdoor irises that are coming from the southern part of the state are practically unsalable; the outdoor iris is not a shipping flower.

C. F. McCormick, 143 North Wabash avenue, was elected secretary of the Chicago Florists' Club at its meeting May 2, succeeding A. T. Pyfer, resigned.

C. L. Washburn was elected a trustee to succeed Walter Scott. H. N. Bruns tendered his resignation as trustee, but the club voted not to accept it.

President P. J. Foley named a ways and means committee to select an executive committee and to handle convention matters. There were between seventy and eighty names on the committee, representing all branches of the trade, and the allied trades, and the president asked the privilege of adding still others should it prove that any interests had been overlooked. On motion of W. N. Rudd the club approved and designated the president and secretary of the club as ex-officio chairman and secretary of the ways and means committee.

Treasurer E. F. Winterson reported $924.37 on hand and all bills paid. The secretary's financial statement was approved.

The president appointed E. R. Farley as chairman of the sports committee to succeed Allie Zech, resigned, and on motion of Mr. Rudd $50 was appropriated to the use of the committee. Also on motion of Mr. Rudd the president was instructed to appoint a committee to revise the by-laws.

R. Papeneau, F. Lambert, August Koch, S. A. Jamieson and Henry Van Gelder were elected to membership.

C. D. Bond exhibited a beautiful cat-leya plant, a white Mossie.

Adjournment was taken to the large dining-room of the Union, where S. A. Jamieson, of the Universal Portland Cement Co., read a paper on "Concrete in Greenhouse Construction," illustrating it with some half hundred interesting and instructive stereopticon views. There were some sixty-five members present, many of whom had come expressly to hear the lecture.

The usual refreshments were served.

Moninger's New Watering System.

For some time the John C. Moninger Co. has been making experiments and tests of engines, pumps and tanks for its new watering systems. Two systems have been installed in greenhouse plants and tried out under actual working conditions. A model of the pneumatic system has been installed in the new show room of the company, where the baby gasoline engine of the line was kept running twenty-six hours without a stop in one of the tests and never missed or back-fired. This engine was designed by the famous designer of the Oldsmobile and Reo motor cars, R. E.

Olds. Engines are also made for kerosene, distillate and fuel oil. The capacities run from one and a half to 150 horse-power. Tanks run from 100 gallons capacity to 20,000 gallons. Pumps of all kinds and sizes are included and it goes without saying that the company has endeavored to select the best pump of the kind for the work from the long list of pumps on the market.

Budlong sublets a part of his floor to Sinner Bros., who in turn sublet to M. C. Gunterberg, Hunt Bros., H. C. Blewitt, F. Beu, A. E. The plant of Hoerber Bros., at Des Plaines, was the center of an electrical storm May 6, and while no damage was done to the glass, a laborer for the Wisconsin Central was struck by a bolt and was so seriously injured that it was necessary to rush him to medical aid in Chicago. The accident happened directly in front of the Hoerber houses.

Tim Matchen says that Peter Reinberg sent the store sixty-eight boxes of Beauties, roses and carnations May 6, the largest day's receipts of the season to date.

Kennicott Bros. Co. has word from W. A. Reiman, at Vincennes, Ind., that the peony crop will be the largest and finest ever. To the opposite effect is the report from Spaulding & Son, Villa Ridge, Ill., who say many buds are blasted and the crop will be shorter than at first supposed, although the quality of what stock is cut will be extra good.

Kyle & Foerster say that Frank Schramm is having excellent success with carnations this season, but that his results with a large crop of antirrhinum are not so satisfactory; in fact, Mr. Schramm says the snapdragons require so much extra work that he will not grow them again.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The unexpected advance in the price of carnations was the feature of the market May 3 and 4. This price was not sustained steadily May 6 and 7, the demand being weak and irregular. The advance was so strong and unexpected as to take those who are best posted completely by surprise. Carnations almost doubled in price, fancies bringing 4 cents and occasionally 5 cents, while ordinary stock that would have sold for 1½ cents a few days before generally brought 3 cents. It is thought that this condition is due to short crops and the low prices that have prevailed throughout the season, and in support of this explanation it is said that a similar advance occurred in May, 1907. There are some, however, who assert that the advance is due to holding for Mothers' day, but while there is probably some holding, this evil is not sufficient to cause the scarcity.

The only other noteworthy feature of the market is the continued demand for fine sweet peas. Roses are more plentiful than any other flower. Outdoor lilac, Jersey grown, is exceedingly fine and is handled by most of the wholesale houses. Bulbous flowers from down east have replaced bulbous flowers from down south. To them may be added some locally grown outdoor stock. Good snapdragons have been in request, but poor snaps, like poor peas, are in a predicament. There is not much else worthy of comment except that the shipping demand continues fairly active.

Subsoiling.

The methods of growing cut flowers in this latitude are gradually changing; the elevated bench is giving way to the solid bed, for two reasons, economy and summer quality. It is an admitted fact outdoors that soil deeply plowed yields better crops than where only the surface is disturbed. In other words, the mixing of the subsoil with the soil is conducive to retaining moisture; the water does not run off readily, as in shallow soil with a hard pan bottom. Granting this, the question arises: Why should not subsoiling be of benefit under glass as well as outdoors?

When it became known that so progressive a man as Rowland C. Hayden deemed this experiment worth trying, it was high time to make an inquiry. This developed the fact that blasting with dynamite, cap and fuse can be and is being so safely done as to render it not only possible but practically safe under glass. This dynamiting is an economical method of breaking the hard pan below the top soil, and opening cracks that run a couple of feet or more into the earth below. The object is to give the roots encouragement and thorough drainage, so that the water will run down and not out over the walks. The idea of blasting inside a greenhouse appeared ridiculous at first, but practical tests show that this is merely an idea; the charges, skillfully laid, raise the soil barely a couple of feet when set off.

It will take a year, maybe more, to determine the value of subsoiling under glass. The experiment will be watched with interest by all who are abreast of the times.

Various Notes.

Pappas, at Broad Street Station, is now first lieutenant for his brother, Charles P. Poryzees, at Fifteenth and Chestnut streets. The immediate effect of this fraternal combination is that Charles P., head of the company, is planning a trip to Europe this summer.

Samuel G. Harris was the successful bidder for the four flower stands at the entrances to the city hall. The size of the bids was a surprise to the city fathers of the reform administration; their predecessors in the machine had always given away the privilege as spoils to the faithful.

Warren S. Engard has an attractive store at Mount Airy. It contains a home-made ice-box that is particularly

A floral expert of national reputation who wishes to remain incognito has issued a collection of seventy-seven photographs of funeral designs, basket arrangements and bouquets. It is an unusual collection. The fine character of the work and the handsome photographs are enhanced by hand painting. Each photograph is delicately colored, adding beauty and reality to the effect, the dark mats adding charm. The story of the publishing of these photographs is interesting. Arthur Zirkman saw an order received in one of the leading flower shops in this country and after the customer had gone he examined the photograph book from which the design had been chosen. Mr. Zirkman was so much struck with these designs that he advised the artist to publish them, promising his aid. This was finally given, the artist explaining that his wife did all the hand painting. Mr. Zirkman's idea is to issue as many or as few of these photographs as each person may desire; he believes that those who want them would not use any of the ordinary design books, as his firm, M. Rice & Co., can make each book virtually an original copy.

The death of W. P. Peacock, father of Lawrence K. Peacock, of Atco, N. J., which occurred last week, was followed in two days by that of Mrs. Peacock, so that the funeral was postponed in order that both might take place together. L. K. Peacock has the sym-

Joseph E. Stanton, formerly of Barnesville, O., and recently with Mrs. A. J. Pennock, of Lansdowne, Pa., has leased the greenhouses of Charles E. Meehan at Slocum and Musgrove streets, Germantown. It is understood that Mr. Stanton will develop a retail business in addition to his wholesale, both for cut flowers and plants.

The death of Mrs. William F. Kasting, of Buffalo, is mourned by friends in this city.

Paul Berkowitz is closely tied to the store of H. Bayersdorfer & Co. by his partner's absence abroad. Orders are coming in well for Memorial day and going out rapidly.

The Joseph Heacock Co. will plant 22,000 White Killarney and Mrs. Aaron Ward in the new house at Roelofs, giving 38,000 roses in all. Roses have been abandoned at Wyncote, increasing on palms there. Orchids and carnations fill the remainder of the space at the main place.

Robert A. Craig says that his company has 30,000 crotons ready for the May demand. Dracæna terminalis is well colored.

Recent visitors included Jacob Wiese, Buffalo, N. Y., and Messrs. Perry and Pierce, Baltimore, Md., the former of the cut flower exchange, the latter of the flower company that bears his name.

William J. Baker is strong on sweet peas. He says that if his customers tried as hard to buy as he does to sell, there would never be any difficulty in cleaning up.

It is said that the Samuel G. Harris contract referred to above is made by three individuals under Mr. Harris' name; these three, Mr. Harris and two others, will operate the four stands at a cost of $5,520 per year for rent. The contract went into effect May 6.

The Market.

The feeling of cheerfulness still prevails in the wholesale cut flower market. The supply of all kinds of stock has shortened up to a considerable extent, which has enabled the dealers to clean out better than they have for weeks. Roses are a little more plentiful than they have been, but there has been no important change in quotations. American Beauties of the best quality are selling at from 15 cents to 25 cents, Brunners about the same. Special Mrs. Jardine, Radiance, My Maryland, Bulgarie, Mrs. Aaron Ward, fetch 8 cents to 10 cents. Special Killarney, Richmond and Lady Hillingdon command 6 cents, and in some cases a little better price is obtained. There is a poor demand for Bride and Bridesmaid except for the smaller grades.

The supply of carnations is considerably less, which accounts for the stiffening of prices, but it is only the best flowers that are touching 4 cents. Lily of the valley has been much called for, but, as the shipments have been much heavier, the quotations have a downward tendency. There has been no change in the prices of orchids and gardenias. There have been large orders for cattleyas, but not sufficient to increase prices. Jonquils are much in evidence at $1.50 to $2 per hundred. Lilies are moving slowly and, as the supply is constantly increasing, it is difficult to hold the prices on these. There is an abundance of sweet peas and the general quality is excellent, but it is difficult to get more than $1 per dozen bunches for the best. There is the usual supply of Spanish iris, an-subject will be "What Happened to Flowers in 1913."

James Coyle has started in the wholesale business at 116 West Twenty-eighth street.

The party visiting London has been badly broken up and will leave on different vessels. Richard Vincent, Jr., and Mrs. Vincent will go on the Philadelphia, Charles H. Totty and Harry A.
Bunyard on the Kronprinz Cecilie and John A. Evans on the Lusitania.

What might have been a disastrous accident happened to the new building of the Pennock-Meehan Co., just after the wholesalers had moved in. Kervan & Co. were building in the rear of their store for the foundation of the annex and the Pennock-Meehan building had not been properly shored up, with the result that the rear end of the store fell over into the yard next door. Repairs are being made rapidly, so that the business of these firms has not been interfered with. For a time there was great excitement in the neighborhood.

Pennock-Meehan Co. now has one of the best equipped stores in the block for the wholesale business.

The sympathy of the craft is extended to Wm. F. Kasting, treasurer of the S. A. F., in the loss of his wife.

Weekly meetings of the local governing board of the National Flower Show Committee are held in the offices of Traendly & Schenck. Harry A. Bun-yard is secretary of this committee and is accomplishing good results in arranging the detail work. Secretary Young, of the S. A. F., reports many inquiries for space for the trade exhibition to be held in conjunction with the convention of the society in Chicago next August.

Alterations are being made rapidly in the building at 105 to 109 West Twenty-eighth street by John S. Nicholas, who reports several applications from wholesale dealers for the stores on the ground floor.

Miss Alwine Asmus, an old established florist at 740 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J., died May 3, aged 74.

The Hinode Co. is consigning its cut to P. J. Smith.

The dealers are making preparations for an extra supply of carnations, especially the white varieties, for Mothers' day, May 12.

In the parade of women May 4, for equal suffrage, it was pleasing to see that most of the 10,000 women in line wore flowers, single daffodils being the most prevalent.

Visitors: Charles E. Meehan, of the Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia; Arthur Zirkman, representing M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia.

Max Schling, who made quite a hit at Easter with a four-leaved clover, says that he has had many requests from the trade for stock of the novelty and has decided to disseminate it this season. Julius Roehrs Co., Ruthersford, are his growers.

The National Flower Show Committee has a quarter of a million stickers on hand in the office of Secretary John Young, who is supplying anyone who will use them on mail.

Charles H. Totty will meet T. W. Pockett, of Australia, the great chrysanthemum grower, in London, and expects to have him return to this country with him.

Paul and Harry Dailedouze and Leonard Barron are among those sailing on the S. S. Philadelphia, May 11, to attend the big show across the water.

The warmer weather, which made its appearance the latter part of last week, had a telling effect on the over-the-counter trade among the seed firms, which report that the rush is on at last. It was a long time coming, but welcome when it arrived.

Harry Bunyard and M. C. Ebel attended the meeting of the executive committee of the National Sweet Pea Society of America in Boston May 4.

Some of the New York seed firms are preparing to make attractive exhibits at the summer show of the Elberon Society, which will be held in the auditorium on the boardwalk at Asbury Park, July 3 to 6.

Plant auctioneers are reporting business well ahead of last year, saying that sales and prices are both better and that the stock coming in has been of such class as to find ready buyers.

Robert W. MacNiff, of the MacNiff Horticultural Co., states that he has been having heavy sales of bay trees in all sizes. He has had some fine stock consigned to him and it has been easily disposed of.

New York city reforms have reached some of the seed houses, and with the new insecticide act and seed bills which are being put through the state legislature, they are wondering what next to expect. The city has cleared the sidewalks and it is inconveniencing some of the firms who heretofore have been able to make good displays in front of their stores.

The local bowlers did not do much last week, for with Bert Chadwick working hard and Joe Manda staying at home, Charlie Scott working a degree, and others on the high sea, the "regulars" did not get together. There are rumors, however, of activity in the near future to train for the Chicago contest.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Trade Exhibition.

The trade exhibition to be held in conjunction with the convention of the Society of American Florists in Chicago August 20 to 23 will eclipse anything of the kind ever held in the history of this society and there will undoubtedly be more florist visitors present than at any previous convention.

I am compiling plans and diagram of floor space; will send a copy when ready. Rates for space are 40 cents per square foot, minimum charge $20. Already several firms have sent in applications for space, leaving the selection to the secretary.

The writer will be in Chicago for the six weeks previous to the convention, and if he can be of service in any way don't hesitate to make the request. This will be a grand opportunity to show anything in the florists' line or for florists' use. John Young, Sec'y.

The Market.

The warm weather continued during the last week and there was a good supply of stock on hand. However, it is used up almost as fast as it comes in, so that there is no great glut in the wholesale market. Prices continue about the same as last week. Growers seem to have been holding back white carnations for Mothers' day, for white carnations are in great demand for that day, since they have the fragrance, the purity, the lasting qualities and the firmness which are symbolic of motherhood.

The violet season has been dull in this section, for the flowers were too poor to handle. Nevertheless, regardless of the lateness of the season, flower buyers are still clamoring for violets. Sweet peas and valley fill the bill for corsages, though pansies and Ward roses are worn a great deal. All roses are in splendid condition, with the exception of Richmonds, which are not especially good. Snapdragons are prime favorites, with the yellow variety in the lead. There are a few good late ramblers in pots. Both Dorothy Perkins and Crimson Ramblers are to be had. Spring weddings are somewhat numerous, but there have been no large ones recently. Carnations begin to show signs of warm weather, for they have brown outer petals and get sleepy in a short time.

Various Notes.

Charles Curtis, of Irondequoit, is growing some excellent sweet peas. The lavender ones are especially good.

George Bennett's crop of spring carnations is holding up splendidly; he is cutting fine, large blooms of Enchantress, Winsor and Boston Market. The good quality of the flowers is undoubtedly due to the cold spring we have had.

Miss Lillian Wheeler, of the Rochester Floral Co., is again at work, after a brief illness.

Henry P. Neun, of North street, has a fine display of boxwoods, both standards and pyramids, in front of his store, which make his place of business most attractive.

Geo. J. Keller, of Mount Hope avenue, is selling good plants of the Dorothy Perkins and Crimson Ramblers, as there is quite a demand for them now, during the scarcity of flowering plants. These ramblers should have been in for Easter, but were several weeks late. They now bring a fair price.

James J. Bates, of Akron, N. Y., is kept busy with spring work and his business is on the increase.

George Boucher is having a run on a few summer specialties, such as cut nasturtiums, baby gladioli, Sander marguerites and choice potted geraniums.

John Dunbar has appointed the following committee to act as the entertainment committee for the forthcoming visit of the Syracuse Rose Society and the Syracuse Florists' Club: E. P. Wilson, chairman; Geo. B. Hart, F. W. Vick, William L. Keller, E. R. Fry.

Two thousand evergreens have recently been set out at Cobb's Hill park.

George B. Hart is handling fine Asparagus plumosus plants in 4-inch pots.

fessor H. L. Fairchild gave an address on "Conservation of Forest Lands," at East High School. Vines were planted this year at that school, since there is no more space left for trees. The Ellwanger-Barry School, No. 25, also observed the day.

Work has begun on the planting of trees and shrubs at Exposition park, under the supervision of the city park board. The funds for carrying on this work come from the Exposition park board, a separate organization.

Miss Turner was helping out for a few days at J. B. Keller Sons' last week.

Visitors: James F. Smith, of Wm. J. Boas & Co., Philadelphia; M. Adler, the pin and novelty man, New York city; Julius Dilloff, of Schloss Bros., New York city; E. K. Sithens, of the Bowen-Dungan Co., Philadelphia.

The death of John Meinhard occurred April 30. He was the father-in-law of F. J. and William L. Keller and was most prominent in German circles, having resided in this city since 1876. He was 81 years old, but unusually active for his age. E. C. A.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

It was an irregular market all of last week. There was an abundance of stock at all of the wholesale markets, where on some days business made a great showing and on other days was dull. The prices were low on big lots, but, as business was not any too brisk on the whole, the retailers did not buy heavily and only at bargain sales. Florists downtown bought thousand lots of carnations, sweet peas and roses.

The weather has been warm all the week and stock does not ship in well. Roses have become soft, and Killarneys and Richmonds come in wide open. There are still plenty of short and medium-stemmed Beauties, while the long fancies are somewhat scarce. Carnations are also plentiful in all varieties, and cheap. Sweet peas are a glut and have been so all the week, and sell at $1 to $2 per thousand.

Outdoor valley is crowding the forced stock down in price. There is plenty of this outdoor stock to be bought at $1 per hundred, and some of it is really fine. Asters and peonies are beginning to come in, but not heavily yet; the few that come in are cleaned up nicely.
Fancy snapdragons sell at $5 per hundred. A fine lot of outdoor tulips are being sent in, in all colors, and bring from $1.50 to $2 per hundred. Lilies are coming in heavily and a great many callas are going to waste for want of demand. Easter lilies sell better. Some nice Spanish iris was seen during the week and it sold well. There is plenty of smilax and ferns.

Various Notes.

Harry Marquard, representing Ralph M. Ward & Co., New York, called on the local growers last week. He says that, for his first trip here, he had good results.

Henry Emunds, of Belleville, Ill., has a fine lot of young plants of Smith's new yellow chrysanthemum, Chrysolora, which he thinks is far superior to Col.
Appleton.

C. Bergstermann made a fine job of the planting at West End Heights. This is one of the big yearly spring planting jobs.

C. A. Kuehn is the local agent for the Evergreen brand of fertilizer. D. D.
Johnson, manager of the United Fertilizer Co., who was here recently, made all arrangements to that effect. Mr.
Kuehn has quite a good demand for it.

Fred Alves, of the Angermueller force, was confined to his room last week by illness. He had hopes of being able to be out for the florists' dance this week.

The St. Clair Floral Co. has opened a retail store at Belleville, in which a large number of bedding plants and cut flowers have been displayed.

Dr. George T. Moore, the new director of the Missouri Botanical Garden, has planned a clinic for diseased plants.
Plans are also made for growing rare tropical fruits. The construction of the these plans to be carried out.

Otto Sander reports that he will have to look for a new location, as the building he now uses has been turned over to a large department store and the improvements will force him out in about sixty days.

F. H. Meinhardt, the Koenig Floral
Co., John Nyflot, J. Steers and W.
Shields, florists doing business near the big cemeteries, have been rushed all the week with cemetery work. The fine, warm weather helped them greatly with their work.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, who is to lead a discussion on "Relations of the Wholesaler, Retailer and Grower," says he has given this subject a good deal of time and will be ready for the members at the club meeting this week.

Pierre Schneider, of the Oakland Floral Co., at Kirkwood, is sending to this market a fancy lot of cut snapdragons, with 4-foot stems. The white, pink and yellow sorts sell well.

A. C. Canfield, of Springfield, Ill., is again first in the market with a fine cut of Daybreak asters. These are handled at Kuehn's.

Smith's wholesale house handled a fine cut of red peonies and an abundant of sweet peas during the last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Amling, of Maywood, Ill., spent a day in this city last week, visiting the local trade.

Fire destroyed a moving picture show in the rear of M. F. Widmer's flower store, in East St. Louis, Ill., last week, causing a damage of $300 to the stock and fixtures in Mr. Widmer's store.

Wm. Schray & Sons, Charles Beyer, John Held and Meurer Bros. have their houses filled with fine bedding stock and have plenty of orders for planting. They will have a busy season from now on with this kind of work.

Fred H. Weber, state vice-president of the S. A. F. for eastern Missouri, says he will have a big list of new members for the society before the convention, and says he will attend all the meetings of the club from now on, so as to talk of the coming meeting to the members.

Frank Windler, of Smith's, who has the arrangements in hand for the florists' dance this week, says that from the sale of tickets he expects the largest attendance of the younger florists, though the older ones were liberal in buying tickets. Everything points to success.

A bogus-check swindler tried to work the following Grand avenue florists last week: Eggeling, Windler, Bergstermann, Beyer and the Metropolitan, but failed each time. The last place visited was that of Mrs. Ayres. She had been warned by the others and had the culprit arrested. On his person were found

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Trade has been about the average, or possibly not quite up to the average, and anyway not so good as we should like to see it. The weather, perhaps, has something to do with it; there has been hardly a day without rain and this seems to have had a bad effect for the last week. Carnations are scarce and are bringing better prices than they did all winter. Most of the growers say they are off crop; in a week or two they will be plentiful again, no doubt. With Mothers' day almost here, a shortness in carnations ought to help some of the growers. Outdoor stock is plentiful. Tulips and narcissi sell well. There is some Spanish iris on the market and it brings good prices. Roses are good and abundant. Funeral work has used up a lot of flowers lately.

Various Notes.

Miss M. A. Wagner, who was associated with Miss Lulu Risdon at the Savoy flower stand, has bought the Crescent Flower Shop, on Pike street, from Mr. Matria, who will hereafter confine his attention to the Paris Florists' place of business. T. W.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The Market.

An abundance of stock of all kinds, with a limited trade, about sizes up the situation this week. There is so much outdoor stock coming to the market that this is used by retailers in preference to the higher priced indoor flowers; consequently the latter do not find a ready sale. Much of the outside stock is of fine quality, especially the Spanish and English irises, but some of the carnations shipped in simply come under the head of rubbish and should never be sent in. Roses from outdoors are good this season, and these also have a tendency to lower the price of indoor stock, as, owing to their lasting qualities, retailers prefer them and are willing to overlook any slight roughness. Funeral work has formed the principal outlet for stock and this keeps up well.

By the time these notes are printed, Fiesta week will be in full swing and an immense amount of stock will be needed for decorating automobiles, floats and other things in the great floral parade. Already the streets and stores have a lively and gala appearance, with flags, bunting and palm leaves. A good deal of the work for this kind of thing is not as profitable as it might be for the retailer, but it at least uses up a lot of stock and is a help to the grower, whose expenses are going on all the time whether his flowers sell or not.

As to prices, there are none. It is simply a case of getting what there is in it. Owners of cars go around to various retailers, asking for bids, and usually the lowest bidder gets the job. It is much the same with the larger decorations; price cutting ruins the business, and, after the extra help, late hours and other expenses are taken into account, there is little left for the florist. There has been an immense demand for cedar and other wreathing, and tons of the boughs have been shipped in for the purpose of making these up.

There is a decided scarcity of good decorative plants and palms; most of those seen around look as though they had been working hard for years and got tired of their job. Of flowering plants there are none worth mentioning.

Various Notes.

Walter Armacost, of Ocean Park, has his new greenhouses ready for the glass. He reports business good.

In last week's notes I gave C. E. Lilley's name as a visitor to the city. This was an error. It should have been James H. Willey, manager of the Leedham Bulb Co., of Santa Cruz, and my apologies are due and hereby tendered to both gentlemen.

Creutz & Co. are handling elegant Spencer sweet peas in all the best colors and will be strong on these and carnations for Decoration day.

Rose shows were held at Pasadena May 4 and at San Diego May 3 and 4, the former at the Board of Trade rooms, the latter at Mission Cliff park.

A. Knopf, of the Redondo Floral Co., had a number of orders from the Los Angeles high school for decorations.

S. Murata has been showing some fine blue Japanese irises, long-stemmed and bright in color.

Many tons of cedar and other material for wreathing are being handled by Tassano Bros., and their big floor space on Hill street looks like a forest these days.

Funeral work and decorations form the bulk of the work with Frank Lichtenberg and these keep all busy. Mrs. Lichtenberg is now ensconced in the new office, and the new basket room at the rear of the store gives plenty of room for display. Mr. Lichtenberg is an artist in store decoration and his efforts along this line for Shriners' week are certainly successful.

Among the offerings at the Los Angeles Flower Market this week I noted some fine outdoor Easter lilies, grown by Hubert Morton at the Signal Hill place. Tulips and other bulb stock are still in good shape here.

The Freeman-Lewis Co. had a pretty home wedding this week, using Chatenay roses and large quantities of valley.

A. F. Borden is still making records. "The biggest April I ever had," he says, and he knows, too, for he has an exact account of every penny taken in since he started business.

Good funeral work and plenty of it is the standby at Morris Goldenson's.

The H. N. Gage Co. has big orders on hand for the Fiesta and plenty of stock to fill them. Fine flowers are arriving all the time from the firm's Hollywood and Long Beach ranches, and at the latter place the picking of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri seed is now in full swing. This firm is now supplying new crop seed in any amounts.

The Elks' float now being prepared at the Roserie is 9 x 30 feet and in the form of a chariot, to which an elk is harnessed. The wheels are clocks, and seven female figures will be on the car. Lavender and white sweet peas and white carnations are the principal flowers used.

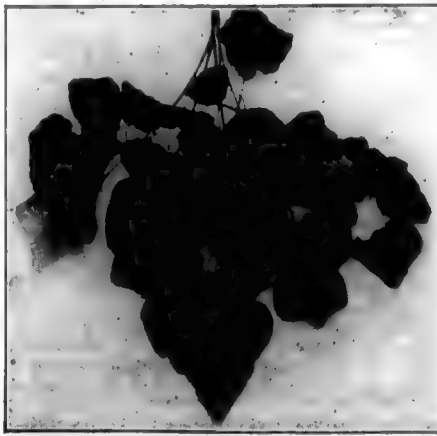

Dieterich & Turner are still busy shipping plants to all sections of the west, from Seattle to San Diego. The 3-inch rose stock here is in grand shape. Among the many interesting things now flowering in the big lath house are Moorea iridifolia and Solandra guttata, or Copa d'Or. H. R. Richards.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have had several much needed showers during the last week, which seem to have put the buying public in somewhat better humor than they have been since Easter. Funeral trade has been good and everything first-class in light colored stock has been used. The avalanche of carnations and roses that we have had to face for the last few weeks is not so noticeable as it has been and will get even less in a short time. Outside grown tulips are past their prime and only the latest blooming sorts are seen. Violets and freesias are over. Valley and lilies move well. Some forced gladioli are shown. Spanish iris is on the wane. It did not sell as well as it did last season, and the same might be said of several other hardy bulbs. Outside stock of half a dozen different kinds is commencing to be a factor in the business.

Various Notes.

H. Kempf, of the Pacific Nursery, will shortly be compelled to move his stock from the old location, as the site is to be used as a part of the exposition grounds.

David Tisch, formerly in the retail trade in San Diego, but more recently foreman for the H. M. Sanborn Co., at Oakland, has returned from a two months' pleasure trip through the eastern states.

Hogan & Kooyman have opened a retail establishment on San Pablo avenue, near Sixteenth street, in Oakland, G.

The Francis Floral Depot, in the California Market, has placed at the disposal of the board of management of the city's improvement clubs 1,000 Shasta daisy plants, and, in order to stimulate the proper care of these, has offered prizes for the largest and most perfect blooms developed by October of this year. Pelicano, Rossi & Co. have also offered 1,000 red dahlia bulbs, and it is hoped that still other florists and nurserymen will give the same sort of assistance to the work of improvement. Members of the trade have been invited to make suggestions to the board of management as to the best manner of beautifying the various sections of the city.

A FLORIST'S FAIR EXHIBIT.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph of the display of Schmitz & Dobner, florists at Stockton, Cal., at a recent San Joaquin county fair. The center of a big circus tent was occupied. House and grounds are complete in every particular. Probably the undertaking was larger than any other display made by florists at an event of this character and the first prize and certificate of merit certainly were well earned.

MR. EBEL'S SUGGESTIONS.

there are those who cannot agree with such reasoning and who believe that while the increased demand for flowers, if it can be developed—and it can be through the inauguration of a systematic campaign—would first of all benefit the retailer, it would be beneficial to all business allied with the florists. It would bring increasing sales to the wholesaler, higher prices to the grower, more business to the supply men and a greater output for the manufacturers. Then why should not each one thus benefited share in the work involved to create a greater demand? You will find in other lines that the producer ex-exploits his brands and helps to create a market for them, and so on until it finally comes to the retailer, who is always found ready to push that which is already being pushed.

Some will argue that manufacturers are differently situated than growers; that they can control the prices of their output. This is partly true, but competition is also keen among most manufacturing lines. The grower will find that with an increased demand for his supply he in time will also find a better control of the prices at which he must dispose of his productions. The law of demand and supply will govern this, as it does in other industries. Overproduction always causes gluts in prices and this holds true whether it is in the line of manufacture or in agriculture, floriculture or horticulture.

It would really be a difficult matter to try to select any other business so well organized as are the florists of this country to undertake a campaign to bring their wares to the attention of the public. They have the machinery and all that seems wanting is the energy to set it in motion.

The national society may be regarded as its main shaft, with the local societies as its revolving wheels. Once set in action, what a power it could wield! Coöperation between the many local societies scattered throughout the land and a strongly constituted committee of the S. A. F. to educate the public could accomplish much. See what the cereal foods interests are doing, educating the people that no breakfast is complete without a dish of prepared oats. The brewers are now educating the public that beer is no longer a stimulant but a food, thereby easing the conscience of many and permitting them to partake of it more freely, thus increasing the demand.

There is a big field in floriculture to bring the sentiment of the people closer to nature's greatest gift. Work on it and teach them that in all walks and conditions of life flowers tend to uplift and not to depress. A mother's burden may be lightened with the presence of the sweet flowers. They also win the way to many a girl's heart. Marriage is made more beautiful when conducted under a bower of flowers. Grief may be lessened when you surround your dead with flowers. Ask, "What is home without flowers?"

Revive the fads. Let no man regard himself well dressed without his boutonniere. Make the woman feel not dressed without the corsage bouquet. Argue that no genteel person would adorn himself with fraudulent jewels. Then why with artificial flowers?

Some will contend that all this sounds well theoretically, but that it cannot be put into practice. Properly worked, it can be done. As an illustration, I have seen an ordinary signboard used as the basis for a publicity campaign which was so well conducted as to draw forth some scathing editorials in many of the newspapers of the country before the campaign was terminated. But the advertisers accomplished their purpose. Their wares were heralded in actual news controversies and this particular signboard gained national prominence. Heinz has distinguished himself with his "57 varieties." Show that flowers have many more uses.

Publicity has firmly established our leading American industries and can be made to do likewise for the plant and flower industry if the same methods are pursued which others have followed. A big convention is drawing near, probably the most important in the history of the S. A. F. Suggestions have been solicited for subjects of interest to be brought before the meeting. Here is one of vital interest and importance to retailers, wholesalers, growers and all allied with the business which the S. A. F. represents. Let the machinery be set in motion when we gather in Chicago.

MAY 30 THE BIG DAY!

In the last few years Decoration Day has become the big day in the flower business. Practically every florist can, if he tries, sell more flowers May 29 and 30 than in any other two days in the year. And it is fine business. Flowers are plentiful and cheap, so that there is a good margin of profit. Also, the customer usually takes the flowers along, so there is no expense for delivery. That adds a whole lot to the profit.

The Peony is the special Decoration Day flower. It makes the biggest show for the money. Also it is the most reliable shipper; you can be sure your Peonies will reach you in fine condition, that they will not go to sleep on your hands and that they will give your customers satisfaction.

Kennicott's is the Peony house. It was our exploitation of the Peony that made the Peony and the Decoration Day business what it is today. We handle more Peonies than any other house in America. For Decoration Day we ship them from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard and to the Pacific coast.

Now booking orders. The stock this year promises to be the finest ever, and with the many thousands of plants we own or control we are assured many thousands of dozens, even with the light crops most of the growers report.

The finest, $8.00 per 100; medium, $5.00 to $6.00 per 100; good stock, $4.00 per 100.

No buyer can lose on Peonies at Decoration Day—sure sale, the only chance is on the weather.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; First Vice-Pres., M. H. Duryea, New York City; Sec'y and Treas., O. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.
Thirtieth annual convention, Chicago, June 25 to 27, 1912.

HOWARD M. EARL, of W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, expects to get away within the next few days for his annual trip to California.

GEORGE R. PEDRICK, wife and daughter, who have been spending the winter in Florida, have returned to their home at Pedricktown, N. J.

THE growing of bulbs of Lilium Harrisii from seeds has advanced far enough on the Pacific coast so that a grower there is able to offer bulbs of commercial size and in commercial quantities for autumn delivery.

THE cool weather is prolonging the seed selling season to an unusual degree. The business has been steadier this season than usual, due, many think, to the fact that the weather has been colder than normal most of the time.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & Co., Philadelphia, say the mail order season just closing was not only extremely satisfactory but the largest they ever have had, in spite of the handicaps of bad weather and shortage in many important lines.

A VOICE FROM MONTANA.

Enclosed please find $1, for which kindly extend my subscription for one year for The Review. I get many times its cost from the pages of The Review devoted to the seed trade and would not know how to get along without the information and reports on crop prospects which you publish and which I find reliable and impartial.

I am increasing my acreage this year very considerably in peas, beans and early sweet corn, and have great confidence in this section to develop earliness and table qualities as well as the highest possible degree of viability. It has been necessary, however, to pay higher prices here than we used to pay back east to get the right parties interested, but we have confidence that the increased yields will justify our locating here.

SWEET CORN FOR SEED.

Sweet-corn seed is usually of lower vitality than that of field sorts, and planting should be delayed until the soil is well prepared, warm, and dry, special care being taken that the seed is not covered too deep. The small-growing, extra-early sorts, like Cory, Crosby, etc., may be planted in drills as close as three feet apart or in hills three feet apart each way and so as to secure from four to eight plants to the yard of drill or three or four plants to the hill.

The stronger growing sorts, like Evergreen and Country Gentleman, partly because of their greater liability to abundant suckering, need even more room than most varieties of field corn and should be planted in drills forty-two to sixty inches apart or in hills the same distance from each other and so as to secure two or three stalks to the hill or to the yard of drill. Experience has demonstrated that with seed sweet corn equally large yields and better matured seed can be obtained from a somewhat thinner stand than would give the largest yield of field corn.

The value of seed corn, especially sweet corn, is largely dependent on the way it is gathered and cured. The average American farmer has drifted into such careless methods of handling corn that it is hard for him to recognize and use the care necessary for the production of good seed. The crop should be harvested as soon as the grain has fully passed into the dough state. The stalks should be cut and put into small shocks, but seed sweet corn can very rarely be well cured in shocks, no matter how small or how carefully they may be set up.

As soon after cutting as the stalks are well wilted, which will usually be in from three to six days, the corn should be husked and put into the drying cribs. It is important, especially with the short-stalked early sorts, that this be done promptly. If allowed to stand long in the shock the stalks will settle so that the ears are likely to come in contact with the soil and the grain be injured in appearance and viability.

Some growers, particularly those of Connecticut and Ohio, do not put the stalks into shocks, but go through and top or remove the part above the ear, and sometimes slip down the husk so as to fully expose the grain to the sun and wind, when it will dry out very rapidly and perfectly and can be gathered from the standing stalk. A disadvantage of this method is that if such stripped corn is exposed to even a slight frost before it is quite dry its viability as well as its vitality is lessened, often entirely destroyed.

In the western states there is usually so little rain and such high, dry winds are prevalent during the autumn months that harvesting can often be safely delayed until the corn is nearly cured in the field on the still standing stalks, and then the corn can be gathered directly into large cribs to complete the drying; but even here early husking and cribbing are desirable.

The best way to handle sweet corn in the field is to husk into baskets or crates, as there is liability to serious injury by dirt, showers, or breaking of the skin if the ears are thrown on the ground or into a wagon, and if this ear shall be exposed to circulating air until the grain is perfectly dry and that this be accomplished without exposure, even for a few hours, to a temperature below 34 or 36 degrees. The vitality of green corn while it is still in the milk or dough state will be destroyed by long exposure to a low temperature, even if it be one several degrees above the freezing point, but as the grain matures and dries out it will endure lower temperatures without serious injury, although long exposure to temperatures much below 32 degrees lessens its vitality.

One of the best and safest ways to cure seed corn is that commonly practiced by the New England growers, the corn being spread in open sheds or barns on scaffolds formed of rails or slats so placed as to allow the air to pass freely between them. The corn should be spread very thinly at first—not more than two or three ears deep—or, better still, in a single layer, but it may be piled deeper as it dries out, care being taken not to do this until the corn is so dry that it will not mold.

A method requiring fewer special facilities but greater care is to put the corn into rail or slat cribs built quite open and not over twenty to thirty inches wide at the bottom, but wider at the top. In filling these cribs, spread the corn to a depth of from twelve to eighteen inches, and then place a series of slats about two feet apart across the crib and just above though not resting on the corn, being fully supported by the sides of the crib. Fill in twelve to eighteen inches of corn above these slats; then place a second layer of slats in the same way, but so as to break joints with the first layer, and repeat until the crib is full.

These slats are to prevent the corn settling together so as to hinder the free access of air. The cobs of sweet corn are not so stiff as those of the field varieties, and if green or partially dried ears are piled without support they will, even in a very narrow crib, settle together so as to prevent thorough drying.

Seed sweet corn can be cured so as to obtain a fine crop of high viability by any similar method, but it is essential that the work be done promptly, so as to take advantage of bright weather and secure the thorough drying out of the corn before it is exposed to continuous damp or freezing weather. It is rarely possible to secure a good lot of seed of high viability if the work of curing is delayed until after the season when favorable weather conditions can be expected.

It is possible to cure corn by artificial heat, but this requires the most skillful use of warmed—not hot—air, kept in constant motion. Even with these precautions there is always a liability of the corn being ruined for seed purposes by mold, rot, or overheating, and for these reasons the method is not recommended.

As soon as the corn is perfectly dry it may be shelled, though it will generally keep much better on the cob. In a temperature below freezing, corn, either on the ear or shelled, will seem to be dry when it is not. Before shelling, it is therefore well to make a test sample of a quart or more, composed of a few grains from a great number of representative ears. If this, after standing for a day or two in a temperature considerably above freezing, becomes soft and damp, the shelling should be delayed until the corn is quite dry.

Well-cured corn is easily shelled by machine, by flails, or by hand, and the grain should be immediately run through a fanning mill, when it may

ARCHIAS SEED STORE, Box 53, Sedalia, Mo

Solitude is the place where they never advertise. The average retail florist does not realize the great value of continued advertising. He perhaps has tried it occasionally, and not noticed any benefit comparative to the cost. Of course he wouldn't. A single advertisement is something like a boil on the neck—people may see it, but it is so unusual that it is distasteful. The conclusion is that the florist is stuck with a lot of surplus rubbish that he wants to run off. It's the stick-to-it advertising that pays, and if Mr. Florist has patience and some money for a long time investment, he's bound to win. The daily newspaper is the best advertising medium for a retail florist. Every day, if possible, or at least three times a week. Keep the ads. boiling—change them with the season—make Lent seem like Xmas. As a matter of fact, Lent should not be such a poor flower season, for it's chiefly the codfish aristocracy who celebrate so they can catch up with their butcher bills. Flowers should be a necessity, among educated people especially, and will probably be some day. The right kind of advertising will do more for the uplift of the florist business than anything on earth. There is one thing more—the most important thing—and that is you must have the quality to back up the advertising. This is absolutely essential to success. An advertisement is worse than nothing unless it rings true. Don't advertise inferior goods—and it's best not to handle that kind. Of course, in this business you cannot avoid occasional trouble—the very nature of the business is such that nothing is absolutely sure—but have a good average. That's what counts. Supply the best there is, and advertise your goods in as truthful a manner as you know how. That's the way we have done, and that's why Horseshoe Brand lily and French bulbs are more in demand than any other brands—because our advertisements are backed up by the best goods in our line florists have ever known. Send for our Book of Bulbology with prices.

be sacked, but it should be closely watched, and if it does not remain perfectly dry in a temperature above freezing it should be again fanned and spread to dry, and this process repeated on the least indication of the presence of moisture.

In order to produce good sweet-corn seed one must be prompt to cut it when ripe, husk it as early as possible, and immediately get it under shelter where it will be exposed to every wind that blows until it is thoroughly dry, using every hour of bright sunshine in order to accomplish this before freezing weather.

The return of usable seed varies greatly, and is affected not only by the variety and the weather, soil, and cultural conditions, but by the care with which the crop is gathered and cured. A seedsman to whom a surplus is not objectionable will contract on a basis of five or six acres of the earlier, lighter-yielding sorts and three or four acres of the larger kinds per 100 bushels wanted; but one to whom a shortage is preferable to a surplus will limit his contracts to three or four acres of the earlier and two or three acres of the larger sorts per 100 bushels wanted. In both cases allowance is made for the liability of total failure of some of the crops.

The prices paid for growing vary greatly with the season, being much lower after seven fat years than after seven lean ones; at the time of writing they range from 70 cents to $1.15 a bushel of fifty pounds for the easier grown sorts, and from $1.10 to $1.50 for the lighter-yielding sorts and for those requiring greater care in curing.

Although contracts are sometimes made per 100 pounds, the more common unit is the struck bushel, which is assumed to weigh fifty pounds; but the actual quantity which the term stands for varies greatly, not only with the sort but with the condition and character of both the stock and the sample, and ranges from as low as thirty-seven pounds in a very dry sample of a choice stock of Evergreen or Country Gentleman corn to fifty-three to fifty-six pounds in a poorly cured sample of the Minnesota variety.

The minimum percentage of viability accepted by seedsmen on growing contracts ranges from seventy-five to eighty-five in years of scarcity to ninety or even ninety-five in years of plenty. There is some excuse for this variation in the fact that corn of low viability at harvest often deteriorates quite rapidly and is practically worthless the second year, while that of high viability kept under favorable storage conditions will germinate nearly as well the second or even the third or the fourth year as the first, and in a short year there is little likelihood of the necessity of carrying over stock, while it is probable that a part at least of the crop in a full year will have to be carried until the next season. Seedsmen often claim the right to purchase, at a reduction in price corresponding

Owing to the backward season in California, all Winter and late Sweet Pea Seed will be late in maturing. To avoid late deliveries, I will send all early orders of Winter Sweet Pea Seed directly from our ranch in Lompoc, Cal. These will reach my farthest customers not later than August 10th, saving over four weeks' time. Send all letters of importance to Lompoc, Cal. We will have all the leading colors and many novelties. Orders booked now. New complete list will be sent out in May.

Mt. Airy, Md., Feb. 26, 1912.

Dear Sir:—We have been cutting very fine peas this season from your stock. Stems 18 and 20 inches, with 3, 4 and 5 flowers, and in several instances with 6 flowers to a stem. You deserve and receive great honor from the trade for bringing Winter flowering Sweet Peas to their present high position in the market. You have already done more for the florist than the great Burbank will ever do.

JESSE P. KING.

We have also only the best Spencer and Unwin late Sweet Pea Seed on hand now, also other Florists' flower seed. Send for list.

NURSERY NEWS.AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Officers for 1911-12: Pres., J. H. Dayton, Falmesville, O.; Vice-pres., W. H. Wyman, North Abington, Mass.; Sec'y, John Hall, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. Thirty-seventh annual meeting, Boston, June 1912.

J. GLENN TEALL, of Columbus, Mont., has purchased a tract of land near Kalispell, Mont., and will start a nursery there.

Two additional tracts of land near Mobile, Ala., were recently purchased by the Webster-Mobile Nurseries, and planting will be started as soon as they are cleared.

THE Phoenix Nursery Co., of Bloomington, Ill., recently had a force of men at work planting shrubbery on Broadway, in Normal, Ill., and otherwise improving the street.

THE next thing on the nurseryman's program, now that the spring rush is over, is the June convention—the annual experience meeting. Prospects are for an unusually large attendance.

J. DYKHUIS, of Felix & Dykhuis, Boskoop, was at Chicago last week on his eleventh annual trip. Mr. Dykhuis is the secretary of the Pomologische Vereeniging, or horticultural society, at Boskoop.

THE nursery season is over except in a few far northern localities. It has been a big rush, and it has not figured up, in all cases, to as good a total as was anticipated. Autumn planting must be encouraged.

THE plans of Tetley, Merriam & Childs, Riverside, Cal., to increase their citrus nursery holdings are revealed in the purchase by Frank A. Tetley of sixty-three acres in the Vista Grande tract, two miles northeast of Highgrove, on the Redlands road. The land is unimproved, with the exception of pumping plant and pipe system over the entire acreage. The latter development was made by the seller, A. D. Bell, who receives $15,000 for the tract.

INSPECTION IN COLORADO.

In the state of Colorado in 1911 the horticultural inspectors condemned only 29,476 out of a total of 1,284,509 fruit trees shipped into the state from outside nurseries. The record is as follows:

Variety.	Inspected.	Condemned.
Apple	864,946	26,077
Pear	57,916	735
Peach, Plum and Apricot..	125,329	1,595
Cherry	236,318	1,089
Totals.....	1,284,509	29,476

The report of the state entomologist, Clarence P. Gillette, just issued, will be full of interest to nurserymen, as it shows every shipment of nursery stock that entered the thirteen counties having horticultural inspectors, giving the name of the shipper, the number of trees or plants of each species and the number condemned from each shipper. The shippers include about all the well known nurseries throughout the entire United States. Other tables summarize the shipments, as of apple trees, showing a total of 864,946 inspected and 26,077 condemned, 24,223 for crown gall, 3 for San Jose scale, 210 for aphid, 203 for blight, 19 for borers and 358 for miscellaneous causes.

It is shown that the total planting of inspected fruit trees for the state was 1,256,358 in 1911, about 600,000 less than in 1910.

CLIMBING AMERICAN BEAUTY

Strong, well established plants in 2½-inch pots. One of the "Comers." Seedling of American Beauty and an unnamed seedling, originated and introduced by Hoopes, Bro. & Thomas Co. It is of the same color and fragrance as the American Beauty, hardy, of strong habit of growth, making shoots of from ten to fifteen feet in one season. The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of the original bush. Our plants are from the stock of Hoopes, Bro. & Thomas Co.; they have bloomed with us and we find that the variety is all that the originators claim. It looks to us like a rose that is sure to find a permanent place in the list of "Best Sellers."

Their approximate aggregate acreage is 224, of which 150 acres are in fruit trees, a total of about 900,000 trees of salable size. "The nurseries of the state are, on the whole, in excellent condition. The San Jose scale, the pest worst dreaded by all nurserymen, was not found in a single nursery last season. Some of the various species of plant lice that infest growing fruit trees were found quite plentifully in a few nurseries. The woolly aphids of the apple is probably the worst species found. This is apparently not at all common, however, and, with proper fumigation of all trees by the nurserymen, there should be none of this louse disseminated with the trees. The green apple aphid, while found in many nurseries, was on the whole scarce. A few species of leaf-infesting mites were commonly found, but in no case was there much damage done by them. Probably the most serious trouble noted in this year's inspection of nurseries was mildew. The season seemed to have been particularly favorable for its development in many places. Good fumigation houses have been built by most of the nursery owners. There are a few who need better equipment for this work."

Certificates were withheld from four nurseries until provision was made for fumigation.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Taking it all around, business last week was really good. Monday there was more than enough stock on hand to supply all demands; after that weather conditions were such that the supply gradually decreased until Thursday, on which day stock was what one would call scarce. Then came Friday, always a good day, and Saturday the Society for the Care of the Sick, a charitable ladies' aid society, conducted a tag day, for which they used about 50,000 cut flowers; roses, carnations, all kinds of bulbous stock, pansies, in fact anything in cut flowers which put in an appearance was used. While it was not a flower day for the retailers, it certainly cleaned up a lot of stock which would not have been sold otherwise.

Various Notes.

Nic Zweifel, of North Milwaukee, remarked May 2 that he had not yet begun to move his young carnations, while in former years he had at least half of them out at that date.

Vegetation in this locality is away behind time. In only the most favorable places can one see outdoor tulips in bloom.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Club, May 2, the most interesting topic was "The Depreciation on Greenhouses," which was one of the many questions to be answered on the income tax sheet. Some thought it amounted to fifteen per cent, not including a repair account; others ventured to give from five to eight per cent plus a repair account as their basis of figuring. It was agreed to take up this matter more thoroughly at some later meeting.

Mrs. August F. Kellner returned from the Waukesha baths last week, where she had sought relief from rheumatism, and claims to be greatly benefited.

Amid a great bower of flowers, Capt. E. G. Crosby, the only Milwaukeean who lost his life in the Titanic catastrophe, was laid to rest in Forest Home cemetery May 6.

To judge from reports of those who do landscape gardening, most of the perennials failed to pull through the severe winter just past.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. claims to have cleaned up stock completely last Thursday for the tag day.

The Holton & Hunkel Co. now operates a Rambler auto truck between the Humboldt avenue and Brown Deer greenhouses.

Gust Rusch & Co. say that business was fine indeed last week.

The Fox Point Floral Co. is, figuratively speaking, crowded to the roof with bedding stock and the various annuals, all of it in first-class shape.

At the W. E. Dallwig store, "the man behind the gun" is busy day and night trying to keep up with orders.

Currie Bros. Co. and Hunkel's Seed Store claim that they have more orders than they can handle conveniently, but say they make hay while the sun shines.

Jim Matthewson, of Sheboygan, Wis., was a visitor recently. E. O.

The Milwaukee Florists' Club has voted not to give a flower show this year. The project was considered at a meeting of the club at the Blatz May 2. The affair was a financial loss last year.

The Market.

Business during the last two weeks was fair, taking into consideration the abominable weather we had during that time. Spanish iris has finished blooming. The recent funeral of one of our most prominent citizens called for every one of these useful flowers, which were at that time at the height of their flowering season. The first gladioli are making their appearance and are selling at retail at good prices. As a rule, mostly light colored varieties, such as Augusta, America, May, etc., are cultivated here, and the amount of bulbs planted increases from year to year. Sweet peas are doing finely in some localities of the city, while in others the crop is poor, on account of the soaked condition of the soil. All kinds of seasonable flowering plants help to adorn the show windows of the stores and the displays of the market gardeners. The stock is plentiful; it moves slowly at reasonable figures.

Outdoor work is greatly handicapped and with many florists the early aster crop will be delayed. Thousands of the aster plants are still waiting to be planted out, together with lots of other plants for the fall and winter season. This year's spring season is one of the worst we have had for a long time, but the florists are cheerful and hope for better weather during the present month.

CANAL DOVER, O.

I am just in from inspecting the peonies. They show up at this time nearly every growth with a fine bud. From the present indications they will be ready early; unless a cold spell retards them we expect a majority of the mid-season sorts to be in for Memorial day. Edulis Superba, Umbellata Rosea (La France) and Marie Stuart will be in about May 23. Tenuifolia is in bloom; usually about May 12 to 15; season much advanced. California privet was all frozen dead. Many so-called hardy plants were frozen out this winter.

EXHIBITION AT BRUGES.

The Societe Royale d'Horticulture de Bruges is arranging an international exhibition to be held August 11 to 18, at the old market place and in the adjoining government buildings and belfry of Bruges. The government and town are assisting largely, and it is said this will assure the success of the enterprise. The Royal Horticultural Society of Bruges is the oldest in the world, having been founded February 5, 1651, since which time it has without intermission followed and aided in its work, and shows the evolution of horticulture until the present day, when it has become one of the important local industries at Bruges. In August the famous market place in Bruges will be transformed into a flower garden surrounded by the giant bay trees for which Bruges is so famed, and in the adjacent buildings below the belfry, immortalized by Longfellow, exhibitors will find spacious halls where they will be able to group their collections of orchids and palms, new and rare plants, etc., to the best advantage. The increasing number of visitors who arrive yearly in August to see "the Venice of the north," with its museums and art galleries and quaint Flemish architecture, will find another attraction in this horticultural exhibition. Programs will be supplied and inquiries answered by Ch. Steinmetz, secretary, Bruges, Belgium.

WE still have several thousand Light Pink and Rose-pink Enchantress cuttings, grown by one of the best, if not the best carnation grower in this part of the country.

MR. FULD'S APPRECIATION.

The following letter has been received from Maurice Fuld, well known as the gladiolus specialist with the H. F. Michell Co., anent the organization of the firm of Chamberlain & Gage, Groton, Mass.;

As a news matter I wish to submit you herewith the following items. The new firm is composed of two such prominent men that I feel they ought to receive mention as to their ability and their previous experiences.

L. Merton Gage perhaps has a world-wide reputation on account of his connection with the American Gladiolus Society, whose secretary he has been since its beginning, but even before that time Mr. Gage had been known all over the world as a collector and breeder of gladioli and his knowledge of the subject is indeed most extensive. He has been growing gladioli for ten years or more. He has studied them even to the point of species and he himself has bred hybrids which we hope in the future will be disseminated. Mr. Gage was a florist at one time, but on account of ill health gave up his business and has lived in Orange, Mass., for a number of years.

Montague Chamberlain is a well known writer on ornithology and has published several works on the history and language of the eastern tribes of Indians and was at one time connected with the scientific school of Harvard University. He is a man of wide business experience and has been for several years financial manager of one of the largest furnishing houses in Boston. Mr. Chamberlain has only of late become an enthusiast on the gladiolus, but he was one of the first to respond to the call for forming the American Gladiolus Society. With the prizes he has offered he has always shown his inclination to favor the amateur side, in which he is deeply interested. Commercially, he has grown gladioli now for three years and his first attempt at a catalogue was published this spring. The catalogue itself speaks for accuracy and thoroughness. He has an enormous space of land which he can devote to this purpose, but has only so far covered three acres. Mr. Chamberlain bought two years ago about 300 seedlings of E. A. Kunderd and among them he has discovered some wonderfully choice novelties. America has added to its list of renowned breeders and hybridizers, the name of Chamberlain & Gage.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

There is a movement on foot in the national capital to have the Society of American Florists pay tribute to those who lost their lives on the ill-fated Titanic. The plans are to have about 1,000 American Beauty roses cast on the waters, May 30, in the vicinity of where the accident occurred. To bring this about it will be necessary to obtain the coöperation of the officials of the White Star Line in order to have the flowers carried on the vessel which will be nearest that point on the day in question, and to have them strewn upon the waters by the officials and sailors of the boat. It is expected that the delegation to the London flower show will take passage on the "flower boat" and, if the plans go through, will be there to witness this ceremony.

A better tribute could not be paid these unfortunates, flower lovers all, and the deed will be one that the society always can look back upon with pride. The fact that the ceremony is to take place on Memorial day and that florists will be at hand to witness it, seems most fitting to the occasion.

William F. Gude, the local representative of the Society of American Florists, is working hard to bring these plans, which are yet in embryo, to a culmination and in his efforts he is receiving the active coöperation of a score of enthusiastic members of the Washington Florists' Club.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

formerly on the site has been demolished and a large cellar dug. Construction work will be undertaken in a short time and the firm has hopes of being able to occupy the building before September 1.

Some handsome specimens of horticultural art are to be seen in the gardens of Washington's 400. Particularly well worthy of mention is the garden surrounding the home of Admiral and Mrs. Dewey on K street, N. W., which is of old-fashioned design.

Otto Bauer, manager of the F street store of the Washington Florists' Co., is spending a week in Atlantic City.

D. G. Grillbortzer, president of the Florists' Club of Washington, has been granted a license to operate his automobile within the District of Columbia. The machine is of the Everett make.

The Republic of Argentina has applied to the United States government for six experts to organize the agricultural work of that country on a larger scale. The propagating garden to be established in Buenos Aires will be in charge of H. F. Schultz, formerly an expert in the employ of the Department of Agriculture.

Z. D. Blackstone is using considerable street car advertising, with good results. The placards are neat and attractive and have pictures of various flowers in addition to the ads. This month he is using a card showing a box of American Beauties in their natural colors placed against a tinted background.

Plans are being made for a large rose exhibition to be given in the new Masonic hall at Brookland, D. C., by the Brookland Citizens' Association. Efforts will be made to have the local florists enter exhibits. The object of the association is to further instill a love of flowers and to inspire the amateur gardeners to beautify the grounds surrounding their homes. Prizes will be given in the various classes. A musical program has been arranged for each evening and no admission fee will be charged. The exhibition will be held May 21 and 22.

W. F. Gude was a guest at the reception tendered by the German societies of Washington to Representative Bartholdt, of Milwaukee, and Hon. Cuno Rudolph, one of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Among the many visitors in town last week were: Elmer Gaehring, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Charles Wonderlin, of Camden, N. J.; Dennis Connor, of Philadelphia, Pa., representing the Foley

The Market.

Conditions in the cut flower market have been, to say the least, peculiar for the first week in May. There has been almost a shortage of everything all week and no special demand at that, but the growers report that it will not continue long. Roses shortened up some, but carnations were really scarce and the wholesalers could not nearly take care of the demand. However, there were plenty of flowers if buyers had only taken such things as were on hand.

The wholesale houses all seem to be satisfied with things, as it gives them some time for other work when they clean up by noon.

Retail business is nothing to brag about, as trade seems quiet all around.

Various Notes.

Mrs. E. A. Williams has had a most beautiful store decoration all week, using spring flowers, such as dogwood blossoms. It is the most refreshing thing we have seen for a long time.

Pittsburgh, while one of the hardest cities in the country in which to grow flowers on account of the smoke and dust from the mills, takes more pains and spends the money to stand at the head of cities who make flower shows, both inside and out, as our parks will testify too, and there is not the least doubt but that this effort by the city is largely responsible for the love of flowers held by our citizens and shown by cut flower and plant trade in this city.

The weather this week has been ideal for the growers to plant out carnations and they have been hard at it.

The Zieger Co. is busy just now, as they combine landscape work with their business, and are in the midst of a rush trying to keep ahead of the season.

The Blind Floral Co. reports the spring trade as being all one could expect.

The E. C. Ludwig Baseball Club is getting into action.

Frank Faulk says the only trouble with business is that it keeps him from getting out in his machine this fine weather.

Things in the Democratic party in Pennsylvania are bound to be right now, as George Marshall, of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., is now at Harrisburg.

Richard Forrest, of Washington, Pa., one of the oldest florists in Washington, has the sympathy of his friends in the loss of his wife, who died Saturday, May 4. Besides her husband, she leaves one child, Mrs. Lloyd Swarthout, who is in the retail flower business in Washington, Pa. Hoo-Hoo.

Greenhouse Heating.

SUBSCRIBERS are invited to write the editor of the Heating Department, describing their troubles or asking any questions regarding the heating of greenhouses, the piping or boiler-room. But please do not ask us to make a choice of apparatus for you. Each boiler advertised in The Review is a good boiler, and the advertisers sell them on their merits.

BOILER AND STACK.

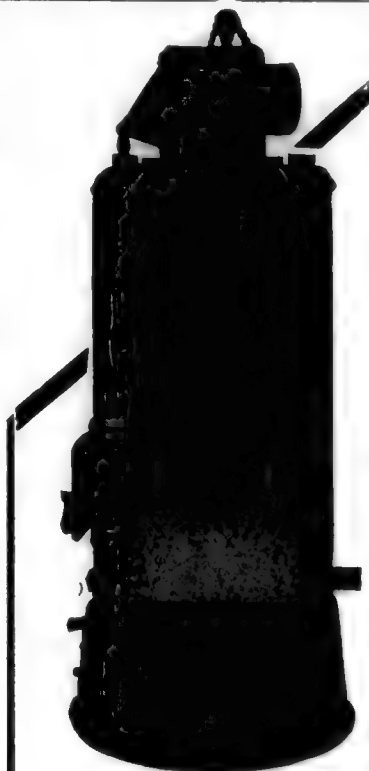

I wish to build two greenhouses 21 x 160 feet, five feet to the gutter and twelve feet to the ridge, which should average about 60 degrees in the climate of Ohio. Will some one kindly tell me what size boiler will be necessary, using steam heat, and how high the stack should be?
J. & R.

Any boiler rated at 5,000 feet would be all right. It will take about 4,000 running feet of 1½-inch pipe, but I would get a boiler rated at 5,000 feet. A stack two feet in diameter and forty feet high will serve.
F. R.

YOKING BOILERS.

We have two fire-box boilers, which will be bricked in, and we wish to connect them and run them together as a battery. We want to arrange them so we can run either one independently. How can we make proper connections? In connecting two boilers to one smoke-stack, which is the better way—to run two separate smoke pipes to the stack or connect the two pipes with a Y and enter the stack with one pipe?
W. & K.

It is not always an easy matter to connect boilers so they will work well. The common way of arranging the smokestack when one is used for two boilers is to set the chimney or stack to one side of the boilers and connect the two by a breeching, i. e., a pipe placed horizontally, into which the gases from both boilers enter, and this is then connected with the chimney. Besides this, each boiler should be provided with both steam and water gauges. Yoke the two together at the Lower the boilers just as far as possible below the pipes in the houses. The greater this distance, the less trouble will be experienced by water backing up in the heating pipes.

At present the hard coal industry is up in the air—there is no immediate prospect for the resumption of production. The soft coal mines are mostly in operation, for their wage arrangements are supposed to be satisfactorily adjusted so that there will be no halt or hitch for two years. The trouble in the anthracite fields of course will turn some demand to the bituminous product, if sufficiently long drawn out, but for the present the market shows little effect. The stocks on hand are so large that few buyers are in the market and the coal on track is hard to move—the users feel that the need for reserve supplies has passed and they are burn-

SUPERIOR MACHINE & BOILER WORKS, Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: In reply to yours of the 4th inst., will say that your No. 4 boiler has given entire satisfaction. I consider this boiler a great improvement over the other style boilers in my place, of which I have two. For quick results it has them all beat. I have never been so well satisfied with any change I have made as I have been with the change from the other style boiler to the Superior. Anyone wanting to see this boiler can see it working on my place, and I will only be too glad to show them.

PROVIDENCE.

The Market.

Business holds up unusually well for the season and there continues to be a good demand. Prices are about normal and the only noticeable feature is the growing custom of purchasing largely of cut flowers on Saturdays for corsages, decorations and home use over Sunday. Funeral work continues good, but there are comparatively few weddings or social functions. Outdoor and landscape work is particularly brisk and good help is at a premium.

Various Notes.

The decorations for the cabaret show, given each evening in the dining room of the Narragansett hotel, are being furnished by Mrs. William Butcher, of Pitman street.

J. Charles McCullough, of Cincinnati, O., was a recent visitor among the trade in this city.

The floral tributes at the funeral of E. C. Ostby, one of the leading manufacturing jewelers of this city, who was drowned on the Titanic, were the most numerous seen in many days.

The State Board of Agriculture will conduct the school gardens of the public schools of this city this season, and the seeds will be furnished by W. S. Pino.

A lot of botanical books, valued at $7,000, has been presented to the John Hay Library at Brown University, in memory of Edward P. Taft.

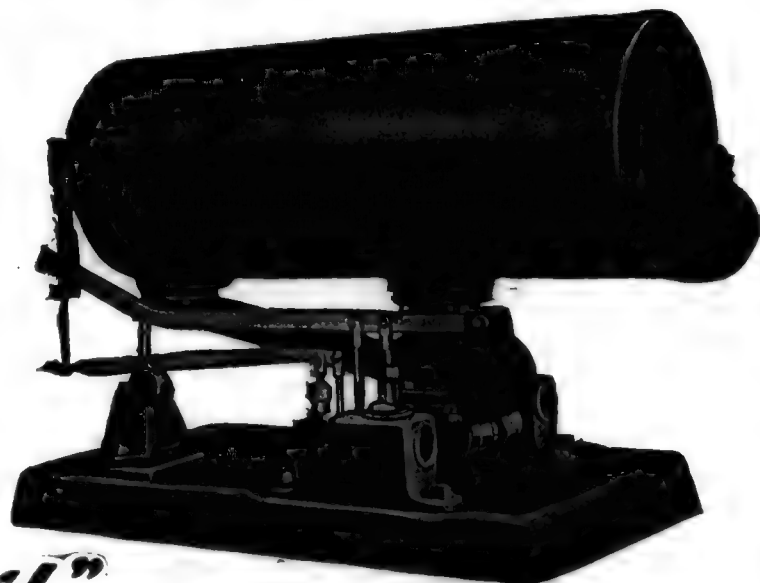

W. Appleton & Son report an unusually active month on outdoor work. They have a large number of estates under their regular care, and this year the number has been greatly increased.

A small greenhouse is to be erected shortly on the estate of Dr. C. D. Easton, 36 Ayrault street, Newport.

The Providence Wholesale Market closed its doors May 1, for an indefinite period.

THE KROESCHELL GREENHOUSE BOILER

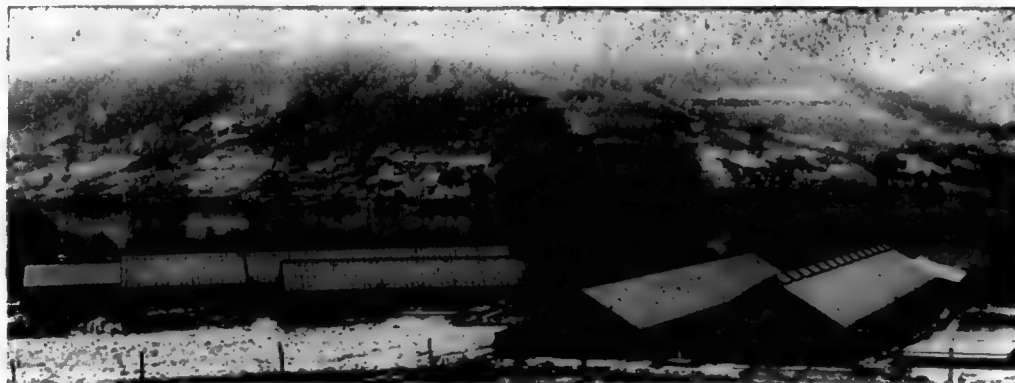

Here is the boiler that is making the most wonderful greenhouse heating record in the world. Florists and gardeners who have used other makes are constantly giving the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler the highest praise.

10,766,000 square feet of glass was equipped with the Kroeschell Boiler during the past five years. You will find the new 1910 model Kroeschell Hot Water Boiler in every state in the Union and Canada.

Our Eastern business has been exceedingly heavy the past season.

ORDER NOW

No. 7 Kroeschell carries over 16,600 sq. ft. Glass

Kroeschell vs. Cast Iron Boilers

Over 1500 Cast Iron Boilers were replaced by the Kroeschell Greenhouse Boiler during the past six years. It is a common occurrence for a Kroeschell to replace two to four cast iron boilers at a single place; this is the CENTRAL HEATING SYSTEM PLAN, and has saved many florists hundreds of dollars per season in fuel alone, besides a big saving in labor.

OUR HEATING ENGINEER has probably had more practical experience in this line than any other greenhouse man, and we place his experience at your service.

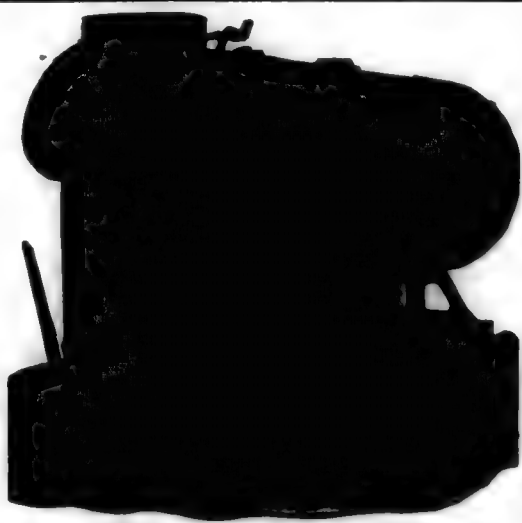

We put up another house 23 x 120 and supposed that we would need another boiler—the reason we inquired of you some time ago—but we were agreeably surprised to find that your No. 7 Boiler, which we bought in September, 1905, will heat it also with ease for our purpose. We are now heating 14,500 sq. ft. of ground under glass, or 16,616 ft. of glass without gable ends. We are well satisfied with the boiler.

The Market.

Business has been quite brisk. The weather has been favorable and stock is cleaning up readily. Large shipments of excellent Beauties arrive daily, as do other roses. Carnations have been cleaning up fairly well and bringing better prices. There is a good supply of Spanish iris, miniature gladioli, etc., and the same are selling well. Sweet peas are in good supply and owing to the big demand for corsage purposes this flower cleans up readily.

Various Notes.

Myer Heller, Richmond, Ind., was a recent visitor in Detroit.

E. A. Feters is becoming quite an expert driver of his large touring car.

Boxwood trees in all sizes and shapes in front of Breitmeyer's store are proving quite an attraction, especially as they are planted into a variety of garden pottery.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange is in receipt of a letter from the Denver Wholesale Florists' Co. doubling up on its fern order and complimenting them upon the excellent quality of the stock.

Harry Breitmeyer is the proud possessor of a new Hupmobile touring car.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Conditions have changed on this market during the last week. Shipping trade has been the heaviest experienced since the holidays. Local trade in a retail way has been only ordinary, the main call for stock coming from surrounding towns. Growers throughout the state who grow bedding stock have thrown out their carnations to make room for pot stock, with the result that everybody wants carnations. As everybody doesn't get all he wants, so everybody takes what he can get, which has made the call steady for roses, sweet peas and late bulbous stock. Some growers say their cuts next week will be much larger, owing to the warmer weather. The "handwriting on the wall" says stock will be scarce for Mothers' day, and it is unfortunate at this time that there should be a general shortage, as it will tend to put prices up a trifle higher than they should be for this time of the year.

Mothers' day is being advertised by the florists' committee and it is expected to bring a great demand for stock of all kinds. F. A. F.

WITTBOLD MOLDS

Chicago, March 30, 1909.

E. H. Hunt, 131 N. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:—Your inquiry regarding the Wittbold Cement Bench received, and in reply would state that we like them very much, and will install them in all of the new houses which we are going to build. They are cheaper than wood to build, and we can see no difference in the stock grown on them and that grown on wooden benches.

Very truly yours,
Basset & Washburn.

Denver, Colo., March 27, 1909.

E. H. Hunt, 131 N. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—We have now erected about seven hundred linear feet of cement benches, using the Wittbold clamps. So far these benches have been used entirely for plants in pots, but we are now planting one bench with Boston ferns.

We find the cost, including labor and material, to be considerably less than the cost of wooden benches.

Yours truly,
J. A. Valentine, President.

THE CUCUMBER WILT.

We have a fine house of cucumbers. They look healthy and are full of small cucumbers, but once in a while a plant wilts when the temperature gets to about 80 degrees; not the whole plant at once, but from one to three leaves in a day. We keep the house at about 60 degrees at night, have the glass shaded and give lots of air. We have to spray them several times a day to keep them from wilting worse. Is there anything we can do to stop it? The beds are on the ground and the soil is nearly all new. The leaves are of extra large size. J. & H.

There are many causes for cucumbers wilting and it is hard to say just what causes the wilt in this particular case. The temperature is not too high; 65 degrees at night would be better than 60 degrees. Shade is not necessary except in the hottest weather and then it should not be heavy. Full-grown plants require heavy watering once every day and sometimes twice a day. The soil must be kept moist, or they will wilt. Sometimes it looks wet on top and is dry farther down. There is a disease called bacterial wilt disease of cucumbers, but it is rare and no remedy has been found for it, other than to clean out thoroughly and start over again. Insects at the roots or main stalk, just below the soil, are the common causes of cucumbers wilting, and it is often the case that the grower thinks it a disease and never finds out differently. In this case it is highly probable that it is either the sciara or the striped cucumber beetle which is causing the plants to wilt. The striped beetle lays eggs at the base of the plant. The young worms hatching out of these are the cause of the wilting. They eat into the main root and can be found in there by splitting the root of an affected plant. The plants wither for a few days and finally die. Tobacco dust will help to keep the old bugs from laying eggs at the base of the plant. H. O.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

The annual observance of Mothers' day is now quite an established feature in Canada's history, and florists generally are having a busy week prior to Sunday, May 12, the day on which the anniversary is held this year.

Carnations are somewhat scarce, now that throwing out has begun, but roses are arriving in great quantities and their quality leaves nothing to be desired. The prices were never lower for this stock so early in the season; $6, $4 and $2 are the ruling rates for the current week for first, second and third grades, respectively.

Bulbous stock, after an exceptionally good season, is about played out, nothing but a few late tulips being brought in for sale.

Sweet peas, both at R. Jennings' greenhouses and at the Dale Estate, are of much better quality than those produced during the last two or three years, and the demand for these flowers has grown enormously this season. Many florists who would order them last year by the hundred now need them by the thousand, and their popularity seems largely increased by the fact that they are "all the rage in England" at present.

Work at the Dale Estate proceeds apace. All the old, small houses have been torn down, to be replaced by three houses 25x850 feet. Thousands of tons of soil have to be dug up and carted in to level up, and, with the emptying of houses and replanting for next season, this establishment appears to be one of the busiest hives of industry in the neighborhood. W. G. P.

West Toledo, O.—Three new Garland houses are being built here by Heinal's Greenhouses. Two are supported by pipes and are 31x133 and 20x133 respectively, the third being 25½ x 133, of trussed iron frame construction.

An Every Way Practical Two Compartment Greenhouse Fifty Feet Long

This is the U-Bar—the Bar that makes U-Bar Greenhouses the famous greenhouses they are.

It's every way practical, because, first and foremost it is a U-Bar house. That tells its own story of a carefully planned plan—a perfect arrangement of the heating—ample ventilation and the innumerable little things that go with a thoroughly thought out and liberally constructed house. A splendid piece of workmanship it is from start to finish. No skimping done. U-Bar houses are not built that way.

They are sold because of what they are and not because of how cheap they are. If you want a top-notch house that unquestionably excels all other curved-eave houses—then the U-Bar is the one. Write us.

FURNISHED in continuous lengths of 500 feet. An exceptionally high grade hose manufactured with a woven jacket insertion instead of cotton duck, and with specially selected rubber in the inner tube and cover.

The woven jacket construction makes a stronger hose than can be obtained from cotton duck, and absolutely precludes the possibility of cover opening at seam—a common cause of failure of hose made on cotton duck. This construction also gives a more flexible hose and reduces the possibility of kinking.

"Magic" Hose is guaranteed to stand a pressure of 500 pounds per square inch, although its bursting pressure is far in excess of this.

The Market.

Trade improved somewhat last week. Stock of all kinds is plentiful. Some first-class roses are to be had. Beauties are A-No. 1. Carnations are a trifle short and the indications are that there will not be enough white to go around for Mothers' day. Sweet peas are plentiful, with a fair demand. Quantities of outdoor bulb stock are available. Easter and calla lilies have a fair sale.

The outlook for the plant business is good this year, judging from the orders already booked. While the season has been backward, some first-class geraniums and other stock are to be seen.

Various Notes.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, spent a day with the trade last week. He is going to leave for Europe next week and expects to attend the flower show in London.

The Roepke-Rieman Co. has an excellent stock of seedling cyclamens, which are finding ready sale.

The Bertermann Bros. Co. has the sidewalk lined with box trees, which are selling well.

The Pahud Floral Co. has a fine lot of bedding stock this year. Charles Pahud says they have booked more orders up to date than they did last year in the same time.

URBANA, ILL.

In preparing plans for the enlargement of the campus of the University of Illinois, it has been found necessary to move the horticultural buildings to a new piece of land. This new site is directly across the campus from the old horticultural grounds and is to be used for the various interests of the horticultural department. This will necessitate the moving of the present horticultural building and the floricultural experimental greenhouses, so as to vacate the present grounds which are to be used as drill grounds.

At a recent meeting of the board of trustees, however, it was decided to let the present experimental greenhouses stand for a year or two and so the moving will not interfere with the experimental work. They also appropriated the money for the new vegetable and plant breeding range and for the floricultural show houses. These are to be located upon the new site. Work upon these houses will be begun as soon as bids are received and the contracts let. The present experimental greenhouses will be moved within the next year or two.

THE SOIL CARRIER IN USE.

SAVES TIME, LABOR ^A_D MONEY

We call your attention to our Gravity Carriers for conveying soil into and out of greenhouses. You are aware of the great amount of labor necessary for changing the loam in your benches. It requires but a few feet of our Gravity Carriers to reduce this expense.

Carriers are made in eight and four foot sections, which can be instantly joined; the rollers are of the best seamless steel tubing, ball bearing, and are 14 inches in length by 2 1/4 inches in diameter. Cut shows how they operate.

A run of carrier is set up with one end projecting through a window and a cart containing the loam is placed at this end. The loam is shoveled into the boxes, which are pushed or conveyed by gravity into the house and dumped into the benches. Empty boxes are pushed back to cart over same run of carrier. When the beds within a convenient radius are filled, the carrier is set up at another window and the work continues until all benches are filled. For removing soil the process is, of course, similar.

We shall be pleased to furnish further details relative to construction and durability of the carriers; also, upon receipt of information relative to size of your greenhouses, furnish an estimate of the cost of a system for your requirements.

CINCINNATI.

The Gateway to the South.

"Good but sluggish" expresses to a nicety the condition of the market last week and this. The ends of supply and demand are coming together and the market is in a much better condition than it was. There is a firmness to business, really apparent for the first time since Easter, that is most gratifying. Prices, too, are holding up better than they did for a while. There is not as much jobbing right now.

There is an adequate offering of everything seasonable at this time and the market in each line is in fairly good condition. The supply is selling up pretty well. Lilies still are a positive drug and the quantity on hand is so large that it is difficult to realize real prices for them.

The green goods business is good.

Various Notes.

Ed Buschle, of C. E. Critchell's, is the last victim of Cupid's darts. He will wed Miss T. Shildrink June 1. Judging from their selection of the day of the month for the event, it looks somewhat as though they wished June would be here sooner.

C. E. Critchell looks for a big call for magnolia leaves before Decoration day.

Frank & Sons, of Portland, Ind., are sending in Killarney, White Killarney, Bride and Maid of the highest quality. This condition of their stock has kept up on everything since last fall.

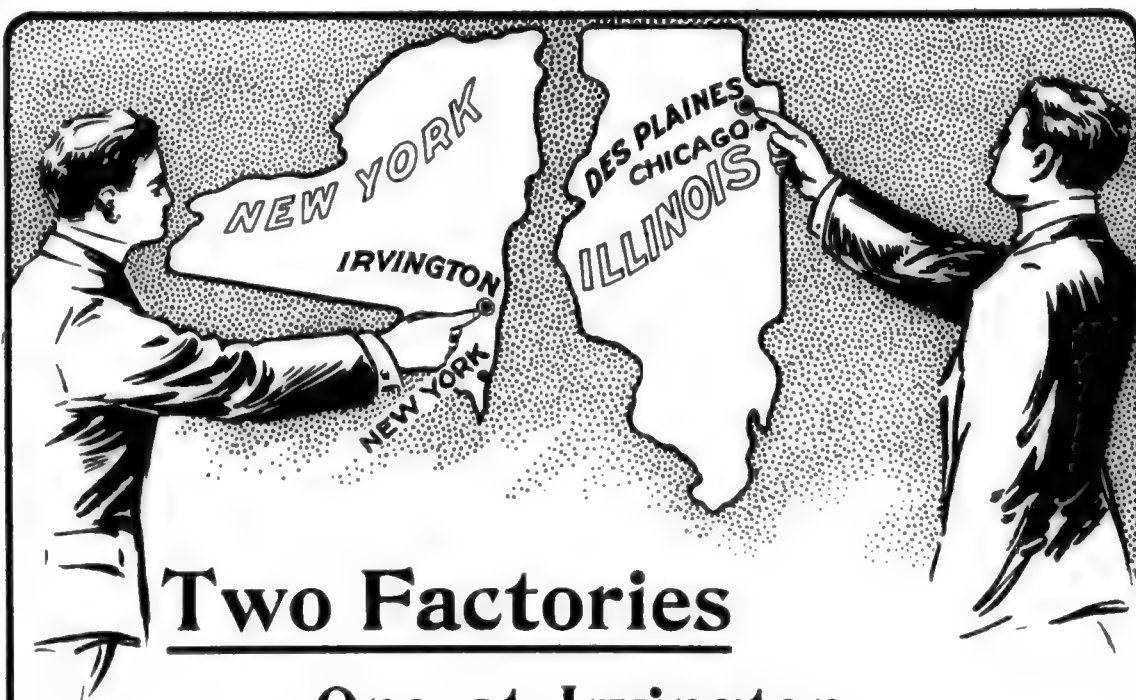

The Cincinnati Cut Flower Exchange has been receiving choice giganteum lilies from the two Schumann firms, on Alexandria pike, Newport, Ky.

William Murphy reports a steadily increasing demand for greens from outside points.

Visitors: S. Seligman, with Wertheimer Bros., New York; M. Reukauf, with Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia.
C. H. H.

Warsaw, N. Y.—H. S. Baker is building an addition of two greenhouses. One of them, 44x144, is of steel and concrete construction; the other, 22x75, has a cypress framework. He also expects to install a new boiler.

Middletown, N. Y.—James P. Lough, formerly proprietor of the Flower Farm, with offices at 10 to 18 Grand avenue, has discontinued his business there, but expects to enter the trade again at some other location.

Two Factories

One at Irvington

30 Miles from New York

The Other at Des Plaines, Ill.

12 Miles from Chicago

IF you are located in the west, your proposition is handled by our western men, who know western conditions and requirements thoroughly. Your materials will be made in our new western factory, just outside of Chicago. Deliveries are prompt—freights are lowest possible. No waiting for delayed eastern shipments.

THE eastern man, used to eastern ways and wanting to do business with men keenly posted on eastern conditions, has the advantage and convenience of our New York, Boston or Philadelphia offices. Our eastern factory (an hour's ride from New York) is the very center of eastern distribution. Shipments can be made by rail or water. In comparison with western factories, we cut out a thousand miles' freight delays—and, incidentally, the freight charges. Whether east or west, we have the factories, the facilities and the men, who are the wide-awake ones in the greenhouse business.

TWO in ONE

A Pump and an Engine Combined in One Unit

The pump may be connected direct to the pipe lines and will give a steady, constant pressure for irrigating or spraying purposes, or it will pump to an overhead or an air-pressure storage tank. In connection with an air-pressure tank, it pumps either air or water, or both at once, as may be required to keep the proper pressure in the tank. The engine is adapted to the use of either gas or gasoline for fuel, and the pump will handle liquid fertilizers quite as well as water, but after all is said and done the chief merit of is their absolute reliability. It is on this feature—reliability—that these pumps and engines have won their reputation. We also offer a variety of styles and sizes that makes them adaptable to almost any conditions.

Did you say your water-supply problem was different from any other? Tell us your troubles and see if we can't help you out. You see, we have made a special study of these problems for many years, and the result is a line of not less than twelve distinct types of Suction Lift and Deep Well Pumps, with gas or gasoline engines, or with electric motor mountings, and with capacities of from 400 to 4000 gallons per hour.

All Standard machines are fully guaranteed. Return at our expense if unsatisfactory, and purchase price will be refunded.

Surely we can help you out—at least, tell us your water-supply troubles and see what we can do. Our Catalogue No. 12 is yours for the asking. Shall we send it? Where?
